

'Scandals' Filling the Eyes and Ears Of Britain With Everything but Proof

By ROBERT B. SEMPLER Jr.
Special to The New York Times
LONDON, May 19—Britain is either on the verge of another controversy involving the alleged sexual irregularities of a prominent politician or it is indulging itself in a monumental and embarrassing waste of time and energy.

Nobody seems to know where the truth lies, but once again the newspapers, the politicians, the Foreign Office and Scotland Yard find themselves preoccupied not with the economy or the nation's basic problems but with hints of personal and diplomatic scandal.

There have been two charges in the last few days. One is potentially explosive but has so far resisted independent verification. The other appears to have been a hoax from start to finish.

A Blue Film Is Reported
First, the Guardian, one of Britain's "serious" papers, has said it has evidence that the South African Embassy attempted to obtain a pornographic film said to involve a prominent British politician thought to be a member of the Liberal Party. The South Africans have denied any interest in the film, which may not exist, but The Guardian is clinging to its story that there is a conspiracy afoot to smear Liberals.

Second, the British Broadcasting Corporation, another respected institution, gave prime-time exposure last night to a man who identified himself as Lieut. Col. Frederick Cheeseman. He presented a long list of impressive credentials, asserted he had been recruited by South Africa's Bureau of State Security and charged that South Africa had compiled elaborate dossiers on leading British Liberals.

A Flare-Up of Headlines
Tonight, Mr. Cheeseman admitted after several inquiries that he had never been in the United States Air Force and was down on his luck. Capitalizing on the prevailing atmosphere of suspicion, he said he had tricked the BBC into putting him on the air and had made up a fictitious story about South African espionage in order to improve his image and the "standard of living of my wife and family."

The interesting point is why the BBC and many newspapers were so easily deceived. And the reason they were deceived, it is believed, is that both The Guardian's "blue-film" story, which has neither been proved nor disproved, and the Cheeseman episode fell on ground that had been well fertilized by the magic words "sex" and "South Africa"—as well as a general worldwide readiness to believe charges of corruption in government.

Just last week, Jeremy Thorpe, leader of the Liberal Party, resigned over allegations that he had once had a homosexual relationship, allegations he denied but never satisfactorily explained. Meanwhile, no less a figure than former Prime Minister Harold Wilson asserted that "antidemocratic" foreign forces, by which he meant South Africans, were deploying unlimited funds to discredit British politicians and "democracy in this country."

Taken together, the Thorpe resignation and the Wilson suggestion that Mr. Thorpe was the victim of a wider campaign of South African defamation improved the climate for the article in the Guardian about the sex film.

Associated Press

and the emergence of Mr. Cheeseman on the BBC. What is not clear is how much there is to charges that the South Africans are up to no good. The South Africans recalled John Russouw, the junior embassy official who The Guardian said was interested in the pornographic film—but only, they said, to get him away from "hounding by the press."

The South Africans' ambassador here has also denied any attempt to begin a conspiracy against Britain. Their security chief in Peoria, Van den Bergh has denied Mr. Cheeseman's allegations. What is very clear, however, is that the notion that there may be a South African conspiracy exercises a powerful hold here, buttressed by a political rationale.

By destroying the Liberals, the theory goes, the South Africans improve the chances of the Conservative Party for gaining power in the next election because, in this view, Liberals tend to vote Tory rather than Labor, when given the chance.

Interests and Sympathies
A Conservative administration, the logic concludes, would be more congenial to South African interests, less sympathetic to black nationalism in the rest of Africa. Armed with this rationale—and, according to some critics, propelled by a fear of being beaten on a story by competitors—the press has pursued the South African "conspiracy" with an eagerness that may yet yield real dividends, but that has also made the press vulnerable to anyone who comes along with a story about espionage and personal intrigue.

Mr. Cheeseman, for example, told his BBC audience last night that he had served in the intelligence branch of the United States Air Force, the Royal Air Force and the Royal Canadian Air Force before he was invited to South Africa to work for the Bureau of State Security. He also said that he had subsequently decided, as a matter of conscience, to tell British Liberals that the South Africans were compiling damaging information about them. He apparently produced none of the alleged dossiers when he met with Liberal leaders.

Inquiries today produced no evidence that Mr. Cheeseman had been a member of air force intelligence in any of the three countries. Meanwhile, British newspapers interviewed his neighbors in Bonington, a small town in Kent, and the neighbors said they were amused to see this "Walter Mitty" turn up on television.

And tonight, Mr. Cheeseman—whose qualifications, which included run-ins with the law, were apparently not checked by the BBC or the Liberals anxious to believe his story—admitted that he had "spun a web" to gain personal notoriety.

Less amused but more embarrassed were Liberal leaders who had hoped to use Mr. Cheeseman's assertions about dossiers to prove their case about a conspiracy. David Steele, a Liberal Member of Parliament and a contender for the leadership position vacated by Mr. Thorpe, said he has passed Mr. Cheeseman's accusations on to Scotland Yard and the Foreign Office. But he said, at a recent news conference, that Mr. Cheeseman "could easily be a nut." The Foreign Office, Scotland Yard and the BBC were all silent on the matter late this afternoon.

The case of the "blue movie" involving a high-ranking politician may turn out to have more substance, but again nobody knows.

The essence of the Guardian article was that a young man somehow came into possession of a movie showing a high-ranking official engaging in erotic activities. The young man called the South African Embassy and Mr. Russouw was said to have shown interest in obtaining the film.

A meeting was arranged, and it was attended as well by a Guardian reporter, presumably because the young man had tipped off the paper in advance. The embassy has since released a transcript of the conversation in Mr. Russouw's office that purports to show that the South Africans had no interest in the film. But The Guardian has asked: If that is so, why did the embassy agree so eagerly to see the young man in the first place?

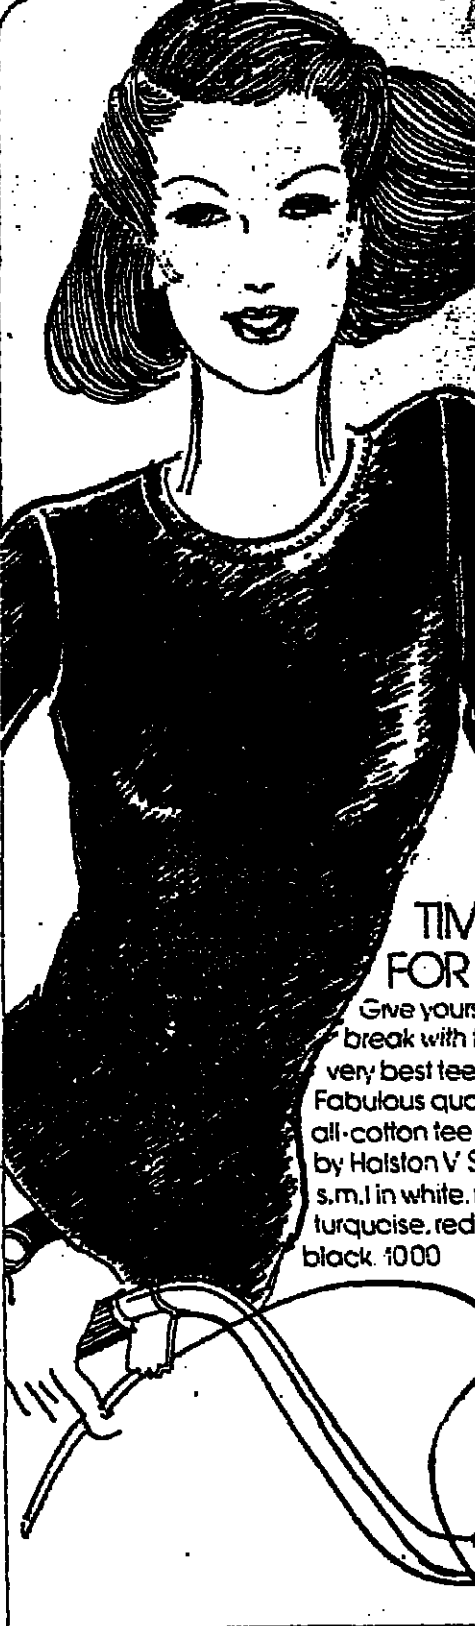

Scotland Yard may be able to unravel all this. But in the meantime, the number of embarrased and angry parties continues to multiply. The BBC is unhappy over its promotion of Mr. Cheeseman. The South Africans are unhappy for the same reason. And the Liberals—who are supposed to be the targets of it all—feel that the furor has complicated their efforts to prove that a conspiracy against them by some South African interests does exist.

As one of them said, "I've known they hate us, because we oppose their internal policies, and because our destruction could usher in Tory rule. But if this is their aim, why are they bungling it so badly?"

As for the Tories, party spokesmen disagree with the accepted logic. They think that if the Liberals, who hold only 13 seats in the House of Commons, were destroyed, the Conservatives would not necessarily be the beneficiaries. They assert also that there would be no more sympathetic to South African aims than the Labor Party has been.

"If these dirty tricks against the Liberals have in fact taken place," said Derek Howe, an adviser to Margaret Thatcher, the Conservative leader, "then they are not only wrong but misplaced."

Japanese Says U.S. Pledges Aid in Lockheed Case

By EMERSON CHAPIN

A special envoy of the Japanese Government has said that Washington has promised close cooperation in action seeking a quick resolution of the Lockheed scandal, which has brought a prolonged political crisis in Japan.

Shizuo Saito, a senior diplomat, indicated that Prime Minister Takeo Miki's Government was pressing for further data to help in prosecution of people accused of receiving payoffs from the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation.

This presumably would involve subpoenaing and questioning by American officials of Lockheed officials involved in the channeling of $12.6 million in fees, commissions and alleged bribes to Japanese businessmen and, it is alleged, to government officials to promote the sale of Lockheed aircraft.

'Evidence' Is Stressed

Mr. Saito, speaking in English, said in an interview in New York City Tuesday that the Japanese authorities had studied all the voluminous information provided thus far by the United States, Securities and Exchange Commission, His Government was "very grateful" for American cooperation, he said, but added: "What we have now is information—not evidence."

"Evidence must be acquired by the Japanese authorities," Mr. Saito said. "To indict, we must have evidence."

The urbane 61-year-old diplomat, who was Japan's chief representative at the United Nations until last February, was sent to the United States as part of an agreement reached by Japan's political parties to end a long boycott of the Parliament by the Opposition groups in protest over the conservative Government's handling of the Lockheed affair.

He was to explain to American leaders the depth of the Japanese crisis and the urgency of dealing with it effectively, promoting further cooperation in the continuing investigations, and exchanging "frank views" on the behavior of multinational corporations.

Talks with U.S. Leaders

During four days in Washington, Mr. Saito met with high United States officials, including Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, Attorney General Edward H. Levi, Secretary of Commerce Elliot L. Richardson and Roderick M. Hills, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

In New York, where he arrived last Saturday, he met with Secretary General Kurt Waldheim of the United Nations and business leaders including David Rockefeller, chairman of the Chase Manhattan Bank, Walter B. Wriston, chairman of Citibank, and H. C. Kauffman, president of the Exxon Corporation. On returning to Tokyo, Mr. Saito was to report immediately to Mr. Miki and Foreign Minister Kiichi Miyazawa.

Washington has been accused in some Japanese circles of indifference toward the crisis, set off in February when the Senate Subcommittee on Multinational Corporations, headed by Senator Frank Church, Democrat of Idaho, disclosed that Lockheed had made payoffs to ts From Peking That Mao Is Failing

INTERFIELD

New York Times

May 19—Stealing the rumors that Tse-tung was from some mysterious malady, analysts here are convinced that the 73-year-old Chairman may now seriously deteriorate.

Photographs of the last month show the Chairman seems to be unwell. The contest picture of his meeting with Lee Kuan Yew on May 12, Chinese leader down with weakly on a plaid-covered Chairman's health may be slipping, they have contributed to increasing uncertainty among analysts here about what has happened in China over the last few months.

The only safe thing to say, one analyst observed, is that no one really knows what is going on and the situation is perhaps more fluid than at any time since the end of the Cultural Revolution.

If Chairman Mao is as weak as his pictures suggest, a key question is who sees him regularly and who serves as his conduit with the world outside the book-lined study where he seems to spend all his time. For fresh quotations attributed to the Chairman have continued to play an important role in the current political campaign, which began after Mr. Chou's death in January.

In the past Mr. Chou undoubtedly helped keep the Chairman informed, and analysts have long believed that three young women who have served as Chairman Mao's interpreters also played a key role. But last month the three women suddenly stopped appearing with the Chairman when he received foreign visitors. The three were Wang Hai-jung, a Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs who is believed to be his niece, Tang Wen-sheng, an American-born woman also known as Nancy Tang, and Chang Hsiao-chih, the wife of Foreign Minister Chiao Kuan-hua.

Was someone jealous of their position? Some diplomats have even speculated that the Chairman's wife, Chiang Ching, a leading member of the so-called radical faction, ordered them removed. But almost nothing is known of the relations between the Chairman and Miss Chiang, his fourth wife, except that she herself once told an American interviewer that they had not always been close.

Little Known of Aides

Chairman Mao must also have some long-time secretaries and aides, but nothing is known about them either.

The Chairman's new interpreter, who served him in his talks with Mr. Lee and at a meeting on April 30 with New Zealand's Prime Minister, Robert Muldoon, is Chi Chao-chu. Mr. Chi, who is about 50 years old, was brought up in New York and attended Harvard before returning to China with his father after the Communist victory in 1949. A serious, intelligent man, according to diplomats who knew him when he served for two years in China's liaison office in Washington, Mr. Chi has his work cut out for him.

For, according to knowledgeable diplomats, Mr. Muldoon found Chairman Mao "largely incomprehensible" during their 15-minute encounter. His voice was weak, Mr. Muldoon is said to have told associates, and Mr. Chi had to ask him to repeat

Kissinger in Oslo for Parley Of NATO Foreign Ministers

OSLO, May 19 (AP)—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger arrived here tonight for the annual conference of North Atlantic Treaty Organization foreign ministers.

Reporters aboard Mr. Kissinger's flight from Washington were briefed on the reaction of NATO leaders to the United States presidential campaign. They were told Western allies wonder who will be in charge and what effect the campaign will have on foreign policy.

American attitudes toward foreign policy were described as fluctuating wildly, requiring Mr. Kissinger to steer a steady course and not give in to pressures of the moment.

Many European officials were described as concerned over the direction of the presidential campaign, with President Ford accused by rivals of letting the United States become a second-rate military power and attacked for supporting détente.

The European leaders, the reporters were told, are worried that such arguments could drive the United States back to a cold war stance.

NATO officials were also said to have expressed fear of the United States might reduce its support of the alliance if Communists gained a role in the Italian and other West European governments.

Some progress was reported to have been made toward settling a dispute with the Soviet Union over the beaming of high levels of microwave radiation into the United States Embassy in Moscow. Discussions are continuing.

Panel in U.N. Asks Palestinians' Return

By PAUL HOFMANN
Special to The New York Times
UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., May 19—A United Nations committee today adopted a set of recommendations stressing the Palestinians' right to return to their homeland.

The text, provided for a two-phase process: In the first phase, to start immediately, all Palestinians who were displaced during and following the war of 1948 and 1949 should be helped to return. In the second phase, Palestinians displaced between 1948 and 1967 should be helped to return.

The text was adopted by consensus without a vote by the 20-nation committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People. The group was set up by the General Assembly last December. Israel declared from the beginning that it would in no way cooperate with the committee.

The permanent observer of the Palestine Liberation Organization attended all meetings of the committee, although he had no right to vote. Full members of the group were mainly Arab and other third-world delegates, and the representatives of Cuba and other Communist nations. The United States is not a member.

Earlier today, the P.L.O., in a harshly worded message, warned the Security Council that the Palestinian people would hold it responsible "for the serious situation in occupied Palestine."

The document likened Israeli measures to Nazi atrocities during World War II.

"The sealing of a part of the city of Nablus is a violation of the basic human rights," the message read, "reminiscent of the ghettos and concentration camps erected by the Hitlerites in several cities of Europe."

Referring to a shooting in Nablus last Sunday, in which a young Arab woman was killed, the Palestinians said she was "murdered in cold blood."

The message from the guerrilla organization reached the Security Council as its 15 members were consulting privately on how to close a debate on the situation in the Israeli-held Arab areas that began more than two weeks ago. No public meeting of the Council has been held since last Friday.

Yesterday, Arab delegates in a caucus agreed on a draft resolution to be introduced in the Council.

The text would affirm that the Fourth Geneva Convention on Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War, which is part of international law, "is applicable to all the occupied Arab territories." The convention bans population transfers and, in the view of United Nations experts, could be construed to prohibit new Jewish settlements in occupied territories.

The Arab draft would also call on Israel, "pending the speedy termination of its occupation," to abide by the Geneva Convention and rescind all actions incompatible with it.

Furthermore, the draft resolution would request Secretary General Kurt Waldheim to dispatch a special representative to Israel to convey the "deep concern" of the Council over the situation in the occupied territories, and urge rescinding of such measures as the establishment of settlements, arrests, expulsions and "political deportation."

The Israeli delegate, Chaim Herzog, said today that his Government would "not accept any visits" from the United Nations. It would be "judicious," he said, to expect a United Nations representative to arrive at a just assessment on a mission that was clearly designed to have a "one-sided function."

World Health Unit Threatens To Curb Israel's Membership

GENEVA, May 19—The assembly of the World Health Organization threatened today to suspend Israel's voting rights and other membership privileges unless the Israeli government agreed to a controversial investigation committee to survey health conditions in the occupied territories.

Earlier this week, Arab and other third-world countries pushed through a resolution justifying the report because the experts, all doctors, could not make their surveys together.

The resolution condemning Israel was introduced on behalf of its cosponsors today by Bukhari of Pakistan, who said it was the earnest hope of the measure's supporters that "it will be regarded as a health issue."

But this view was rejected by Dr. S. Paul Erlich Jr., the United States representative. He said that "whatever health concerns may originally have been embodied in this question have been discarded" by the assembly's actions this week.

Israel has also objected to the terms of the mandate given the committee as prejudging the situation in the occupied territories.

The objections cover such passages as those in today's report that have the W.H.O. committee "deeply concerned" over "mass arrests, administrative detention and ill-treatment" of the Arab population; and the "confiscation and expropriation" of Arab property.

Dr. Erlich said that "the repeated introduction of such issues in the United Nations, by the side opposing Israel 'before, during and after' its visit, detracts from the credibility and reputation of our organization as a world health improvement in health services in the territories since they were occupied by Israel in 1967.

Members of the European Economic Community — Britain, Ireland, the Netherlands, Denmark, West Germany, Luxembourg and Belgium — also voted against the resolution.

France and Italy — abstained.

Israel has refused to allow the committee, consisting of experts from Rumania, Senegal, and Indonesia, to visit the occupied Arab territories as a unit.

The reason given was that Israel has no diplomatic relations with Senegal or Indonesia.

However, the experts were permitted to make their surveys individually, and they drew up a report saying there had been "slow but steady" improvement in health services in the territories since they were occupied by Israel in 1967.

Funeral of a Beirut Editor Reflects the Agony of a Divided Nation leagues—scores of Palestinians, Lebanese Moslems and left-wing Christians—felt the risks were too great to make the trip. No one in Lebanon could have assured them against abduction or death by a sniper's bullet.

At best, in a city where everybody seems to know everybody else on both sides of the line, the presence of Mr. Saab's friends and colleagues from the other side would have been seen as a provocation. Some of them canceled the trip at the last moment in anger and frustration.

The war here has a daily rhythm. Most of the fighting and shelling takes place during the night. In the morning most of the gunmen sleep on mattresses in commandeered private villas and apartments in every block along the battle line. In the early afternoon the shooting gets heavy.

At least 12 Lebanese journalists have been killed since the start of the civil war. Some were abducted and burned before being slain.

"A lot of casualties for a press that people like to call 'the most venal in the world,'" an editor said.

Before the war Beirut had 22 daily newspapers and several weeklies. Now the figure is down to about 15 as a result of the strife.

Several take strong stands and are believed to be subsidized by the Arab governments whose opinions they reflect.

But others, like An-Nahar, the largest daily, published by Ghassan Tuani, are stubbornly independent. So is L'Orient-Le Jour, which shares An-Nahar's premises. Six of the two papers' journalists have been killed in the civil war.

An indeterminate number of so-called "wild" publications have sprung up, put out by the private militias of the leftist-Moslem alliance and the Christian conservatives, as well as by various Palestinian guerrilla factions.

These publications are hawked on the streets by teen-agers of both sexes carrying automatic weapons. The price paid by the customer is determined by the degree of fear he feels.

Before entering a new sector of town, a driver stops at the first roadblock to buy the local paper. It is a gesture of good will and a laissez-passer.

Of the established newspapers, only An-Nahar, which appears in Ashrafyah, the Maronite Christian bastion in Beirut.

All the others have their plants and offices in the more or less neutral but Moslem-controlled area of western Beirut.

Mr. Saab, the editor buried today, had lived in a hotel on Hamra Street with his entire staff for seven months. His home, less than 200 yards from the spot where he was shot, had been bombed out and his wife and children had moved to a mountain village in Christian territory.

All the other editors of L'Orient-Le Jour are Christians like Mr. Saab. French is the second language of the Lebanese Christians. The Moslems tend to choose English as their second language.

In front of the hotel where Mr. Saab lived, Al-Fatah, the Palestinian guerrilla organization, has had a protective road block for many months.

On a side street a few yards away, the staff of An-Nahar has taken over another hotel. Other papers have made similar arrangements. Almost all the editors are separated from their families.

All these are morning newspapers and their staffs work late after midnight, returning to the hotels along empty streets. Journalists and assorted gunmen, stationary or motorized, are the only people out at that time.

The exception is the staff of a restaurant—the Lamb House—near Hamra that is open all night and, enjoying excellent protection, feeds both the gunmen and the journalists.

termed "laughable," the Pakistani delegate's assurance that the resolution's supporters were concerned only with health matters. He said that the same countries had rejected the experts' report because it was "far too factual."

The Israeli delegate noted that the resolution demanded that the special committee "remain in close consultation" with the Arab nations and the Palestine Liberation Organization in carrying out the proposed new survey.

This meant, Professor Davies commented, that the committee was to undergo a "continuous brainwashing" by the side opposing Israel "before, during and after" its visit.

That's because the mountains that inspired this

For the Basque Nationalists, Madrid Is Still the Enemy

By HENRY KAMM

BILBAO, Spain, May 14—In the Basque country, where ethnic separatism and a high degree of labor militancy combined to produce the sharpest opposition in the 36 years of Franco's dictatorship, the liberalization that followed the general's death last November has been least felt.

The openness with which opposition figures conduct their affairs in Madrid or Barcelona is absent here. Those eager to have their name in print are as rare in Bilbao as they are common in other cities.

A series of interviews with politicians and well-informed observers centered on the paradox of a region where opposition activity was the most open when repression was greatest and remains largely clandestine when it has emerged elsewhere.

The Undying Antagonism
The most frequently heard explanation was the essential antagonism between Basque nationalism and any government in Madrid. A Roman Catholic scholar and priest said:

"Spain for us is the enemy. For the unity of Spain, the Basques are the fundamental problem. The regionalism of other regions does not constitute a serious problem."

As a result, in this widely held view, a more liberal Spain than Franco's will still be apprehensive and less liberal when dealing with the Basques. The priest continued:

"Since the death of Franco there is more tolerance in political life, but when it touches Basque nationalism the police intervene. Such political demonstrations are brutally stopped."

Opposition is Open
The differences between displays of Catalan nationalism in Barcelona and Basque nationalism here are striking. Nationalism in Catalonia openly flies its flag, while Basque nationalism is whispered. Nowhere is the difference more pronounced than at the universities.

Barcelona's three universities are open centers of opposition, ranging from liberal democracies for its 24 member nations, went on strike today, industry representatives and extremism. Communist meetings are held in university halls with professors as active as students; walls inside and out are covered with leaflets and inscriptions; and most students carry notebooks displaying the Catalan flag and slogans in Catalan demanding autonomy in culture and politics.

The University of Bilbao is a quieter and austere place in comparison: no meetings, no inscriptions, no flags. The students speak in Spanish, and professors who are not conservatives hide their opinions.

Student political activity exists, nevertheless, as it did before Franco's death, but it is little more open than before. All political movements, including the guerrillas of E.T.A., the most prominent group, enjoy campus support.

"First of all, complete anonymity because there is no freedom here," a scholar said at the outset of an interview in March, "they went out on a sympathy strike for one day, two days. Then they said, 'I go back to work.' In the past, the strike situation could have escalated."

RULING PARTY WINS BERMUDA ELECTION
HAMILTON, Bermuda, May 19 (Reuters)—The more conservative United Bermuda Party today emerged as victor in this self-governing British colony's general elections, but saw its majority reduced in the House of Assembly.

The governing party won 26 of the 40 seats in the House, compared with 30 last year. The opposition Progressive Labor Party took the 14 remaining, an increase of 4 over last year.

The predominantly white United Bermuda Party's share of the votes dropped to 55 percent while the mainly black Progressives took 44 percent of the votes.

Bermuda's population is 55,000, about two-thirds black.

Labor-Peace Unit Struck
PARIS, May 19 (Reuters)—The staff of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, which consistently advocates cautious labor action, ranging from liberal democracies for its 24 member nations, went on strike today, industry representatives and the Basque Nationalist Party, a within which all labor contracts are concluded. Increasingly employers are negotiating with the clandestine unions that have long existed. Agreement reached with the Government-run syndicate becomes a mere ratification of an accord reached outside.

"The level of life is not bad," he said. "Now people have something to lose. There is a new phenomenon in the last five years. Maybe a certain conservatism."

"When strikes began in Madrid after the death of Franco, everybody said there would be a revolution in the Basque country," the lawyer continued. "The occasion was there, because many labor contracts were up for renewal. There were strikes, but almost no chance of any general strike at any time."

"Even after Vitoria," he said, "referring to a nearby city where two strikers were killed which he proved himself a political moderate. A similar request was made by a leader of the strike situation could have escalated."

The lawyer gave as another reason for the comparative outward serenity of the Communist Party, which yields considerable influence through Workers Commissions under its control.

On the Labor Scene
"The Communist Party said, 'Two days is enough,'" the lawyer said. "Their policy is to reach an agreement with the progressive bourgeoisie. They want to show that they are the strongest, can call a strike but also show that they are not radical."

While the political scene appears unchanged, much has happened in labor-management relations, a vital element in the maintenance of social peace in this city of metal and shipbuilding industries. Again, little shows on the surface.

The death of Franco, in the opinion of union leaders, industrialists and labor lawyers, appears to have hastened the effective demise of the syndicate structure he created. It is a Government-dominated organization that unites labor and industry representatives and advance since Franco's death. Labor relations in the Basque country are an example of a more open political climate. The Government-run syndicate becomes a mere ratification of an accord reached outside.

"Franco's death has broken the dialogue of the dead within the syndicate, and management now talks with representative people," a leader in the General Union of Labor, the Socialist movement, said.

Illegal but Not Clandestine
The General Union, the Communist-run Workers Commissions and a left-wing Roman Catholic union have formed coordinating committees — the first in this province — that are expected by some to be the forerunners of a nationwide union federation if the Government authorizes the creation of legal independent unions.

"Now we remain illegal but not clandestine," said the leader, who spent four months in prison last year for an illegal activity.

The lawyer said that the achievement symbolizes its extrajudicial nature and hope for the future.

He was referring to a major concern here: the reasons since the Civil War in 1939.

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, May 19—Richard Aurelio, former Deputy Mayor of New York, has registered with the Justice Department as a foreign agent in connection with his work as a representative of the manufacturer of the Concorde supersonic airliner.

Mr. Aurelio declined to disclose his fee, but the manufacturer is being billed $100 an hour for Mr. Aurelio's work, according to papers on file with the Justice Department.

Mr. Aurelio said his main job was helping officials of the Société Nationale Industrielle Aérospatiale, the manufacturer of the aircraft, to meet public officials in New York and New Jersey.

He said that he had arranged meetings in Albany, Trenton and New York between Concorde officials and state legislators, cabinet officers and officials of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey. He added that he had particularly sought to set up meetings with state transportation and environmental commissioners.

"They just needed assistance in organizing their presentations, and counseling on who to see," Mr. Aurelio said of his French clients. "These are the obvious problems that foreigners have."

Mr. Aurelio, president of Daniel J. Edelman of New York Inc., a public relations company, was selected for the job by DGA International Inc., whose board chairman is former Senator Charles Goodell, a New York Republican. DGA handles the entire Aérospatiale account, and charges $100 an hour for its services, in addition to a $200,000 retainer, according to papers on file with the Justice Department.

The New York Times
Richard R. Aurelio

Lloyd Preslar, a vice president of DGA, said that Mr. Aurelio had been hired as an individual and not as a president of a public relations firm. "I think he's been terribly successful in helping us get the truth across about the airplane," Mr. Preslar said. He

Purchase of Belgian Guns Fought as Pentagon Is Sued

WASHINGTON, May 19—The Maine Congressional delegation joined the Marenmont Corporation today in filing a suit against the Defense Department to prevent the purchase of about $30 million worth of machine guns from a Belgian concern.

The suit in the Federal District Court of the District of Columbia named Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld, his predecessor, James R. Schlesinger, and Secretary of noted that the Port Authority had delayed its decision on the aircraft, and that New Jersey also had taken no position. The New York Legislature has voted to ban the aircraft, however.

Challenge Is Rejected
WASHINGTON, May 19 (UPI)—The United States Court of Appeals refused today to block flights into the United States by the Concorde, rejecting challengers' arguments that Government permission for the flights was surrounded by lies and law violations.

The court affirmed the permit issued by Transportation Secretary William T. Coleman Jr. for 16 months of trial passenger service by the Concorde, scheduled to begin Monday.

Parties urging that the British-French airliner be denied service connecting London and Paris with Washington and New York included environmental and consumer groups and representatives of counties in New York and northern Virginia that will be in the flight path.

There was no immediate word from these groups as to whether the decision would be appealed.

the Army Martin R. Hoffmann as defendants.

It seeks an injunction against the purchase of 18,000 light machine guns for tanks and other armored vehicles from Belgium's Fabrique Nationale. The Army decided six weeks ago to buy the Belgian gun after extensive tests in competition with a similar weapon manufactured by Marenmont Corporation, at its plant in Saco, Me.

Senators Edmund S. Muskie and William D. Hathaway, both Democrats, were joined by Representatives David F. Emery and William S. Cohen, both Republicans as co-plaintiffs.

Stalin Is Still Revered as a Hero in His Home Town

By DAVID K. SHPLER
Special to The New York Times

GORI, U.S.S.R.—Open tributes to Stalin, which have been virtually obliterated throughout most of the Soviet Union in the last 20 years, continue to thrive in Georgia, and especially here in Gori, where he was born.

Stalin's portrait is hung in some factories and stores. Toasts are drunk to his memory. Sometimes there is griping about the official ignominy imposed on his name by Moscow.

This does not seem to grow out of any special sympathy for the Stalinist policies of oppression, but rather from a deeply rooted Georgian national pride that sees Stalin as a native son who made good, who stepped with Lenin into the vanguard of the prerevolutionary Bolsheviks, who led his country to victory through the devastation of World War II.

It is unusual in the Soviet Union for any symbol of minority ethnicity and cultural distinctiveness to carry political connotations and remain officially legitimate.

That Stalin can be thus toasted here is testimony to the Georgians' nimble cleverness in carving out legitimate ways of setting themselves off from the ethnic Russians while retaining their credentials as loyal Soviet citizens. It is a cunning that can be seen also in the double entendres of Georgian films and Georgian painting, and even the Georgian Communist Party, which all seem governed by less rigid standards of ideological purity than in Moscow.

Yet it testifies also to the ambivalence about Stalin that remains beneath the surface of Soviet life—for ethnic Russians as well—in the wake of a de-Stalinization campaign that was ultimately abortive.

The most dramatic expression of the ambivalence is in Gori, 40 miles west of Tiflis, the capital of the Caucasian republic. At the end of a well-manicured garden, set off from

The New York Times/David K. Shpler
Visitors approach the heroic statue of Stalin, in the main museum building in Gori. On the banner are his words: "As far as I am concerned, I am just a student of Lenin and my goal is to be a worthy disciple of his."

the rest of this dusty town of dull brick houses and earth-colored tile roofs, the Stalin Museum rises in clean marbled lines.

Here, the tumble-down house of Stalin's parents is preserved with its cramped single room, where Stalin was born Dec. 21, 1879, as Josif Dzhugashvili.

Inside the main building, Stalin is portrayed through five sedate rooms of memorabilia, letters, photographs and statues as a winning youth with a poetic flare (as a boy, he wrote a poem called "Flowers of My Georgia"), a dedicated and central figure in the revolution, a faithful disciple of Lenin. Only a fraction of the exhibits covers the period of his power, from 1924 to his death in 1953.

Left completely unmentioned in the museum's displays are the party purges, the massive suppression, the executions and imprisonments, the reign of fear denounced by Nikita S. Khrushchev in his 1956 "secret speech" at the 20th party congress, the speech that set de-Stalinization in motion.

When asked about the omissions, a guide explained simply: "We have a memorial museum, and that is why we prefer not to mention negative factors. The purpose is to glorify him. That period was already discussed at the congress; that's why it was decided to exclude it from the museum."

Silence on Stalin's Crimes

The silence here is an echo of the silence that has settled on the rest of the country on the subject of Stalin's crimes. The cosmetic elements of de-Stalinization were pursued after the 22d party congress in 1961, five years after the Khrushchev speech.

A woman remembers visiting the home of a Georgian whose parents were executed in 1938. "Tears in his eyes, he told the sad story then declared, 'Now let's drink to Stalin, our hero.'"

She attributed it to Georgian nationalism, but a Georgian dissident had another explanation: "It is a psychological complex. 'Something done out of fear, terror.'"

The more perilous your situation, he explained, the more loudly you drink to Stalin. It is an old reflex.

Suslov, in East Berlin, Assails Enemies of Détente

Special to The New York Times

EAST BERLIN, May 19—Mikhail A. Suslov, Moscow's chief ideologist, charged here today that "enemies of détente" were endangering peace in the world. He said "American hawks, West German revenge-seekers, and Maoists" had joined forces against the Soviet Union and against Communism.

Mr. Suslov spoke on the second day of the ninth party congress of East Germany's Communist Party, which he is attending as chief Soviet delegate in place of Leonid I. Brezhnev, the party leader.

The speaker coupled his attacks with calls for total compliance in the Communist camp with the principle of "proletarian internationalism," the term that has come to mean subservience to Moscow's leadership in the Communist movement.

His warnings of threats to peace appeared designed to frighten independent-minded Communists in Europe back into the fold. A handful of parties, among them the French, the Italians, but also the Yugoslavs, the Rumanians and the Spanish have emerged on a more independent course, challenging Moscow's central role.

"Any deviation from the principle of proletarian internationalism bears in itself the seeds of defeat and of losses," Mr. Suslov said, as 2,500 East German delegates applauded. "All achievements of our movement so far are linked to this principle. Only with this principle in mind can and will new victories be achieved."

Mr. Suslov's call for "a renewal of solidarity among the brother parties" was echoed by Communist leaders from Moscow's closest allies, Edward Gierek of Poland, Gustav Husak of Czechoslovakia, Janos Kadar of Hungary and Todor Zhivkov of Bulgaria. Other parties, including the Rumanians and the Yugoslavs, sent lower-ranking delegates.

The five leaders who spoke today and Erich Honecker, the East German party chief, who opened the congress yesterday, all pledged their continuing support for a European meeting of Communist parties that has now been set for some time "in the near future" in East Berlin.

announced that Mr. Nascimento would leave Saturday on his first official visit to Moscow. The Prime Minister said that Cubans were cooperating here in all fields, but specifically in agriculture—production of sugar and coffee—and in education and health. Cuban and Angolan relations have been cemented with the blood of Cuban and Angolan soldiers shed together, Prime Minister Nascimento said.
In last night's speech, the Prime Minister said Cuban guerrillas have been fighting since the 1960's at the side of the forces of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola. In other speeches he has referred to recent Cuban support to the Popular Movement's forces in their defeat of rival nationalist movements that were backed by troops from South Africa. Mr. Nascimento said that present relations with Portugal were in a "critical" stage. He expressed the hope that Portuguese leaders would regain their good sense so that relations could be normalized. Portuguese sources here said that the Luanda Government's latest move is tantamount to a rupture of official relations. The two countries have not yet agreed on an exchange of ambassadors, but Lisbon has kept a chargé d'affaires here. He is in Portugal for consultations at the moment.

The Angolan Government sent a diplomatic note Monday to the Portuguese mission, requesting the departure of the diplomatic representatives. Today, the mission was closed. Relations between Lisbon and Luanda have been tense since independence last Nov. 11. At that time the Portuguese refused to recognize the government established here by the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola because the movement was still fighting two rival nationalist groups for control of the country.

Portugal recognized the Popular Movement's government on Feb. 22, after recognition had been extended by the Organization of African Unity and by the European Common Market. By that time the Popular Movement did not feel a need for Lisbon's approval, and so delayed agreement on an exchange of ambassadors. The present crisis between the two countries began at the end of April in a diplomatic note to Lisbon, characterized as an ultimatum. Luanda accused the Portuguese Government of allowing Portugal to become "a center of reactionary forces organizing themselves against the Angolan people and using the press to insult and slander leaders of the Popular Movement and the People's Republic of Angola."

Specifically, the Angolans protested against a bomb that damaged their office in Oporto, Portugal, on April 22, and against a series of articles in the Portuguese press criticizing the Popular Movement's rule.

A main Angolan complaint was that Lisbon had allowed Henrique Vial Neto, a leader of the defeated National Front for the Liberation of Angola to enter Portugal and grant press interviews. In retaliation Luanda closed down its office in Lisbon on April 26 and suspended all visas for Portuguese citizens except for special cases. On May 1, the Angolan Government announced the confiscation of several important Portuguese concerns on the ground that their administrators had abandoned their posts.
Then, last weekend, President Agostinho Neto said at a rally in the southern city of Lubango, formerly S4 da Bandeira, that the state would expropriate all property abandoned by the colonialists—farms, factories and houses. It has been estimated that half a million Portuguese fled Angola in panic before independence. Most of them hoped to return when the fighting among the nationalist movements ended.

After the withdrawal of the South African troops and the victory with Cuban support of the Popular Movement, thousands of Portuguese refugees applied for visas to return to Angola. Luanda authorities are reluctant to receive the Portuguese settlers unless they have some technical expertise.

Forty-nine prisoners were released May 7, hours before Mr. Simon arrived for a brief visit. Mr. Simon reportedly got assurances that in exchange for his image-bolstering trip here the military junta would release political prisoners.

BUFFER ZONE SET BY SOUTH AFRICA

Strip Along Angola Border Planned to Curb Raids by Guerrilla Group

JOHANNESBURG, May 19 (AP)—South Africa announced today that it would create a 1,000-mile-long no man's land along the border of Angola in an effort to stem increasing raids by black nationalist guerrillas into disputed South-West Africa.

The Government also announced sweeping measures giving authorities powers to evacuate villagers from "prohibited areas," order curfews, conduct searches, restrict travel and arrest suspected terrorists.

The announcements marked a sharp intensification of the struggle with guerrillas of the South-West Africa People's Organization. They followed reports of a daylight raid yesterday during which these guerrillas publicly executed a 70-year-old black villager.

These guerrillas have been waging a sporadic hit-and-run campaign for the last decade in an effort to wrest South-West Africa—known among Black Africans and in the United Nations as Namibia—from South Africa. The territory, which is rich in minerals, is administered from South Africa under a League of Nations mandate that had been declared ended by the United Nations.

South African intelligence sources say they believe that these Soviet-armed guerrillas operating from bases in southern Angola are now being trained by Cuban soldiers.

Soviet arms and 15,000 Cuban soldiers helped Angola's ruling Popular Movement defeat two rival movements after the country gained independence from Portugal last year, and many of the Cubans are still there.

The South African announcement said that the no man's land between Angola and South-West Africa would be a half-mile wide. It said that people removed from there or other "prohibited areas" would be compensated.

The idea, under discussion by South African authorities for several months, envisions the creation of what United States troops in South Vietnam called a free-fire zone to act as a barrier to guerrilla infiltration.

At least 500 people have already been uprooted in the Ovambo border region. How many other villagers will be moved was not immediately known.

The new regulations also will require "any person who is not an officer or employee of the state or the administration of South-West Africa" to surrender all arms and ammunition.

The latest guerrilla attack, at Oshangu, took place six miles south of the Angolan border. This was the account given by Owambo chief minister, Cornelius Njoba.

A band of 20 terrorists arrived at 8 A.M. yesterday. They entered the house of a shopowner, Israel Jonah, where they herded the people together.

"For no apparent reason the terrorist leader ordered Joseph Katende to be shot in front of the people. Two of the terrorists mowed him down with automatic firearms.

"His body was so riddled with bullets that it was grotesquely disfigured."

It was the latest in over 60 terrorist acts by the insurgents reported since July.

South Africa's Prime Minister, John Vorster, met with South-West Africa's white leaders yesterday in Cape Town, apparently to discuss the security situation in the territory. Meanwhile, debate is growing whether representatives of the South-West Africa People's Organization should be included in the constitutional talks on the territory's political future.

Critics say that the talks, in which both blacks and whites are participating, are useless unless the South-West Africa People's Organization—recognized by the United Nations as the legitimate representative of

Pope Plans to Canonize Three Saints on Monday

ROME, May 19 (Reuters)—Pope Paul will announce next Monday his intention to canonize three new Roman Catholic saints, the Vatican said today.

Among them will be a Scottish martyr, John Ogilvie, a Jesuit executed in 1815 for refusing to recognize the supremacy of King James I.

The two other new saints are the Blessed Sordani and the Blessed Beatrix de Silva Meneses, a Spanish nun who lived from 1424 to 1490 and founded the Order of the Most Holy Conception.

A majority of the territory's people is included.

Mr. Vorster has strongly opposed the organization's participation in the past because he regards it as a Soviet pawn. But he has said he would not bar it from joining if the delegates to the talks want it.

A major complication, however, is that the South-West Africa People's Organization is split between a foreign-based militant wing conducting the guerrilla war and a more moderate wing operating inside South-West Africa.

Curfew Set in Zone
PRETORIA, South Africa, May 19 (Reuters)—In the buffer zone to be established in South-West Africa to impede guerrilla infiltration, a curfew will be imposed in Ovamboland, northernmost part of the territory, and this will mean that no one may enter or leave the area without a permit after dark.

The new measure was announced in a special Government gazette today.

U.S. Officials Split on Aid to Ethiopia

By BERNARD WEINRAUB
Special to The New York Times
ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, May 19—United States officials in Addis Ababa and Washington are engaged in a sharp debate about the American military commitment to Ethiopia and the use of American arms against Eritrean rebels.

The debate involves officials, on the one side, who insist that the United States must continue to serve as Ethiopia's major weapons supplier because of the threat of sporadic warfare with neighboring Somalia, a hostile nation supported by the Soviet Union.

On the other side, some officials in the Embassy here as well as African specialists in the State Department contend that the Ethiopian government has shown scant friendship for the United States and little commitment to civil liberties.

Some cans were distributed in California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Maryland and others along the Eastern Seaboard, the agency said.

The F.D.A. said that the pimientos "may cause temporary or medically reversible adverse health consequences," but the "probability of serious health consequences is remote."

some irony, officials say, is that the United States has been blamed in recent years for supporting unpopular right-wing governments. In Ethiopia, the military regime has taken a radical, left-wing stance and the Government press condemns "imperialists" and "reactionaries."

Rebuff From Vietnam
According to Western sources, the Government has tried, without much success, to lessen its dependence on the United States. Sources said that the Ethiopians quietly asked the South Vietnamese Government recently to sell some of the American arms left after the fall of Saigon, but the Vietnamese refused.

The Ethiopians have recently purchased, according to sources, $1 million in ammunition from Turkey, submachine pistols and other weapons from Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia. A reliable Western source said that China had also agreed to send a small quantity of weapons for the current peasant march into Eritrea.

The Government denies that hundreds of trucks, crammed with thousands of predominantly Christian peasants, are moving toward Eritrea in an offensive to destroy the 15-year-old independence movement, made up of many Moslems. But witnesses as well as intelligence reports reaching embassies make it clear that a march is under way.

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP)—The Food and Drug Administration announced today the recall of more than 250,000 cans of imported pimientos that it said had been improperly processed.

Since 1953 Ethiopia has received more than $200 million in military assistance, and the nation's armed force of 40,000 is almost totally equipped by the United States. Ethiopia is now receiving an annual military grant of $10 million, largely for training and replacement of spare parts.

Two years ago Ethiopia signed a $200 million contract with the United States, largely for air defense and radar equipment. The military assistance advisory group here includes 46 Americans. The number was as high as 200 in the early 1970's. What gives the arms issue

Richer Nations Are Cool To Trade Plan of the Poor

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN
Special to The New York Times

NAIROBI, Kenya, May 19—President Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines suggested that the third world go it alone and attempt a multibillion-dollar fund to regulate commodity prices but most delegations from industrial countries at the United Nations economic conference here are showing no interest.

As advocated by the Philippines, Venezuela and Algeria, the plan calls for the 111 developing nations to raise $3 billion for the creation of what is called a common fund. Originally they had urged the participation of industrialized countries.

The fund, as they envision it, could buy buffer stocks of key commodities to regulate supply and demand and thereby protect prices of these exports from sharp fluctuations. The fund would also regulate commodity prices by linking them to a market of manufactured goods.

With the exception of the Netherlands, which has in principle accepted this idea, none of the industrialized nations has been won over. With varying degrees of emphasis they see the plan as unworkable, subject to political manipulation by the third world majority and tying up too great a share of development resources.

These nations have suggested instead some mechanism of regulating commodity markets on a case-by-case basis with equal participation in the process by both consumers and producers.

that in his estimation what worked most against the success of the go-it-alone approach to the fund was the recognition of most third-world delegations that their greatest chance of redressing the inequalities of trade patterns lay with producer-consumer cooperation.

Meanwhile, there is momentum here for the French position, which calls for a series of case-by-case commodity arrangements concluded by producers and consumers of 10 basic items, with provisions for financing buffer stocks and with the possibility offered of discussion in two years on coordinating these individual funds.

Paul M. Boeker, the head of the United States delegation, described the American position as being quite close to the French.

Mr. Boeker said that the quest for a third-world fund would not alter the United States belief that "the world does not need a common fund and that all the objectives of a common fund could be better met by other mechanisms."

Houston Moves to 'Nationalize' Its Oil

By JAMES P. STERBA
Special to The New York Times

HOUSTON, May 19—While flabbergasted oilmen shook their heads in disbelief, the City of Houston today moved to "nationalize"—or rather, municipalize—its potential oil wealth and, in effect, become perhaps the first government entity in the nation to go into the oil business.

Mayor Fred Hofheinz, dubbed "Our local Arab sheik" by one oilman, asked the City Council this afternoon to authorize a lawsuit to take over from private claimants all oil and natural gas rights under Memorial Park, near downtown Houston.

The Council approved the suit after the Mayor argued that the city should drill its own wells, or hire someone to do it, rather than lease the oil rights on a royalty basis to a private oil company.

"He's pulling a little Venezuela on us right in our own backyard," chortled an attorney for one of the major oil concerns with headquarters here. "It's a government takeover pure and simple. It's what we've been fighting around the world for 50 years. Don't tell Washington. We don't want to give them any ideas."

Not all were chuckling, however. Some oilmen said privately that they saw little humor in the irony of Houston, the world oil business capital and a bastion of free enterprise, attempting to socialize its oil.

Brownco Inc., a concern that claimed leases in the 1,500-acre drilling proposal Monday after the Mayor decided its offer of royalty payments of more than 30 percent was not enough.

"If we are successful in the suit which I recommend then I believe the city should drill for oil or gas in the park, but only under the strictest of terms," said the Mayor.

"First of all," he added, "I think we should attempt to persuade local interests to drill exploratory wells on a public-interest basis—that is, at no cost to the city—and then to give 100 percent of the proceeds, if any, to the city. I am convinced this afternoon to authorize a lawsuit to take over from private claimants all oil and natural gas rights under Memorial Park, near downtown Houston."

Several oilmen questioned the park's serene environment, except as a public relations move to show that drilling could be done without disrupting the park's serene environment. Neighboring environmental groups had protested Brownco's drilling plans at several Council meetings and public hearings.

But, the oilmen said, the public relations benefit might be more than offset by an example here. "It's a government takeover pure and simple. It's what we've been fighting around the world for 50 years. Don't tell Washington. We don't want to give them any ideas."

Was Lee Harvey Oswald guilty of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy? 'Presumed Guilty' traces and challenges the investigation from its initial organization to the construction of the final findings of the Warren Commission Report, which concluded that Lee Harvey Oswald, acting alone had assassinated President Kennedy. As a result of over eight years of careful research every shred of evidence including all of the commission's once-secret internal memos have been examined, all of which leads the author to the conclusion that Lee Harvey Oswald was prejudged and that John F. Kennedy's murderer is still today a free man.

Senate Votes to Oversee C. I. A. And Other Intelligence Agencies

of 87 to 7, the Senate approved a compromise agreement worked out last week by Senate leaders establishing the permanent committee.

The eight Democrats and seven Republicans who will serve on the new committee will be named by the Senate majority and minority leaders. Speculation about a choice of chairman centered on Senators Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, Walter Huddleston of Kentucky and Daniel K. Inouye of Hawaii, all Democrats.

"I'm not asking for that job," said Mr. Church, who is campaigning for the Democratic Presidential nomination. "I think I've done my work," he told reporters.

Senator Is Satisfied

Mr. Church expressed satisfaction that the new committee had the power it needed to monitor the intelligence activities properly, even though the House of Representatives has no such committee and it was unclear how the new Senate committee would work with the Congressional machinery. "One good committee can do the job," Mr. Church said.

Budgets for the intelligence agencies would be authorized annually by the new committee, but this budget authority would be shared with other committees in the case of the F.B.I., which would be shared with the Judiciary Committee, and the defense intelligence agencies, which would be shared with the Armed Services committee.

Senator Abraham A. Ribicoff, Democrat of Connecticut who was floor manager of the resolution, said that the Senate could debate these budget figures in secret and disguise them in other legislation, as is now the practice.

Two members each from the appropriations, Armed Services, Foreign Relations and Judiciary Committees would be among the 15 members of the new committee, and all the members of the committee would be limited to eight years of service.

The resolution sets up procedures to let the full Senate decide if the committee could make public classified information and it prohibits the unauthorized release of such information by a senator or staff member on the committee.

In unsuccessfully arguing against including defense intelligence agencies in the committee's jurisdiction, Mr. Stennis maintained that the proliferation of involvement by Senate committees in intelligence matters would inevitably lead to greater disclosures on the nature and scope of U.S. intelligence activities.

"I don't care if you have a committee of one, it's almost impossible to stop leaks," said Senator Barry Goldwater, Republican of Arizona.

Mr. Ribicoff argued that the resolution contained safeguards to protect sensitive information.

The 22 votes against the resolution were cast by 15 Republicans and 7 Southern Democrats.

Carey Sets Up Unit to Aid Victims of Italian Quake

Governor Carey has announced the appointment of a special committee to coordinate the efforts of New Yorkers in providing relief for the victims of the recent earthquake in northern Italy.

Mr. Carey said that the chairmen of the committee would be Secretary of State Mario M. Cuomo, the Social Services Commissioner, Philip L. Tola, and Maj. Gen. Vito J. Castellano, the chief of staff to the Governor.

The Governor said that the committee would contact state agencies and charitable organizations throughout the state and identify the needed supplies and the locations to which they should be brought for transport to Italy.

"Even if the cigarette tested had 60% more tar than MERIT, a significant majority of all smokers tested reported new 'Enriched Flavor' MERIT delivered more taste."

—American Institute of Consumer Opinion

Extensive taste-testing with thousands of smokers shows 'Enriched Flavor' MERIT delivers more taste than higher tar brands.

The bottom line was conclusive: In a series of taste tests conducted for MERIT by the American Institute of Consumer Opinion, smokers from all across the country judged MERIT to have more flavor than five leading low tar cigarette brands.*

What's really startling—and of major importance to all smokers—is that MERIT has less tar than these five brands.

Less tar. Yet more taste.

That's the report on a remarkable new taste process called 'Enriched Flavor.' A way to pack tobacco with extra flavor without the usual corresponding increase in tar.

'Enriched Flavor.' It's exclusive to MERIT. The cigarette with only 9 mg. tar, one of the lowest tar levels in smoking today.

MERIT MENTHOL is packed with 'Enriched Flavor' too. And in similar tests, 9 mg. MERIT MENTHOL was reported to deliver as much—or more—taste than the 11 mg. to 15 mg. tar menthol brands tested.

You've been smoking "low tar, good taste" claims long enough. Now smoke the cigarette.

MERIT.

Researchers Find Large Doses of Vitamin C May Damage Gene Ma

By JANE E. BRODY

Canadian researchers have found indications that large doses of vitamin C—not much higher than the amounts some people take to ward off colds and flu—can damage the genetic material of human cells. The ability to damage genes, or mutagenicity, suggests that this vitamin, which is also known as ascorbic acid, may be able to cause birth defects or cancer or both.

The research team, headed by Dr. Hans F. Stich, acting director of the University of British Columbia's Cancer Research Centre, said that on the basis of available data it was "difficult to evaluate the degree of genetic hazard posed by vitamin C to man." But the researchers urged caution in the use of large quantities of the vitamin.

In an interview yesterday, the scientists said that the damage had been found thus far in three test systems—in bacterial cells in human skin cells in test tubes and in living mice that were force-fed the vitamin.

Use of Ascorbic Acid
In all the tests, ascorbic acid produced damage to the DNA, or deoxyribonucleic acid, (which makes up the genes) of cells only when the substance was partly oxidized or was in the presence of a heavy metal, such as copper. But since traces of metals, including copper, are commonly found in drinking water and foodstuffs, and since vitamin C tablets may become partly oxidized when they stand around for long periods, the finding may have relevance to common human uses of the vitamin, the researchers believe.

Besides its use as a purported cold preventive or cure, ascorbic acid is being used increasingly as a food additive. It has long been added to canned fruits and potatoes to retard browning. It is also being used more and more to prevent the formation of nitrosamines, which are potent carcinogens, in cured meats that contain the additive sodium nitrite.

The Canadian studies, one of which was described in the April 22 issue of the British scientific journal Nature, suggest that persons who take very large doses of vitamin C may expose themselves to a potential hazard. In the interview, Dr. Richard San, a geneticist and biochemist on the Canadian team, said that the concentrations of vitamin C that proved harmful in the laboratory tests were 10 to 100 times higher than the level that would be found in the stomach of a person who took one gram (1,000 milligrams) of vitamin C and whose stomach contained about a quart and a half of liquid or food at the time. As advocated by some prominent scientists and physicians, some persons with cold sympoms take five or more grams of vitamin C at one time (and sometimes on a relatively empty stomach), which could result in a concentration in the stomach of that used, Dr. San said, only when the vitamin was partly oxidized or combined with copper. In the preliminary studies on mice, the animals were fed the equivalent of what, on human cells, he added, both added to body fluids in the test tube experiments. Bangladesh Reports Attack By Force of 100 From India

DACCA, Bangladesh, May 19 (AP)—About 100 armed people crossed into eastern Bangladesh from India yesterday and attacked the frontier post at Matirban with the support of mortar fire from Indian border forces, Bangladesh officials said today.

The officials said that border forces repulsed the attack and that there were no casualties on the Bangladesh side.

They did not say whether those reported to have made the attack were in military uniforms. They said they came from the north and that there was heavy mortar fire from across the border. Matirban is in the Sunamganj subdivision of Sylhet. Bangladesh, formerly East Pakistan, is virtually surrounded by Indian territory.

HI-FI SANELY-PRICE

You don't have to go crazy and spend thousands of dollars when you buy a hifi system.

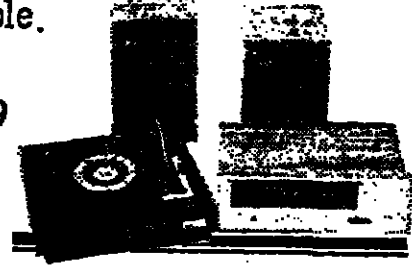

Not at Tech Hifi. Because we have great-sounding systems starting as low as $199. (Of course, we also have systems for $6,000. So if your ears and wallet are in this category, Tech Hifi is your store.)

Most people are in the $199-to-$599 range. And this is where Tech Hifi has a larger selection than any other store.

At Tech Hifi, you don't need to go insane with your checkbook to be crazy about what you buy. HI-FI RISK-FREE Buying a music system at Tech Hifi is fun, not risky. If anything at all displeases you about anything you buy from us, just bring it back within seven days and we'll give you something else, or give you back your money.

And you'll get 90 days with your system at home to decide if it's exactly what you wanted. (Not, you can trade any of your components for 100% credit towards the retail price of anything in our store.)

If your equipment proves to be defective, return it within 60 days of purchase and we'll either repair it quickly (within three working days) or replace it with a new unit. Come in to Tech Hifi this week. You have nothing to lose.

You don't have to react to off-brand components to get a great sounding system for under $500 at Tech Hifi. The all-funco-name system shown here is just one example. It features the high performance Sansel S31 am/fm stereo receiver (12 watts min. RMS per channel, 8 ohms, 40 to 20,000 Hz., 1% T.H.D.), wide-range ADC XC-6 2-way acoustic-suspension loudspeakers and the dependable SSR 2260K automatic tunable with a Shure M81 magnetic cartridge. $299

You could spend $1,000 for more than this and still not get appreciably better music than this $529 Tech Hifi system. The Marantz 2230 am/fm stereo receiver, our 30 watts min. RMS 8 channel amp from 40 to 20,000 Hz., is under 0.5% T.H.D. The speakers are EPI 90—similar to those rated by a leading consumer publication as damped, adjustable, stylish, fast and fine. AIR-INDIA TO LONDON $432 ROUND-TRIP. AND WE'LL SPOIL YOU IN THE BARGAIN.

The price is great. It's yours from now until May 31 and from September 1 to October 31. The only requirement is that you stay from 22 to 45 days which is not exactly a hardship. From June 1 to August 31, this fare is $527, which is still a bargain.

(But, if you're the kind of person who can plan two months ahead and if you buy your tickets two full months in advance, we offer a fare of $410 until Aug. 31. Which is stunning. In September and October, this fare becomes $325.)

During these periods, these are the lowest scheduled airline individual fares.

But you get more than a great round-trip fare when you fly Air-India. You get Air-India. With all that means. Surprisingly lovely 747s whose interiors are opulently decorated in glowing Indian colors and designs. Excellent food: your choice of Continental or authentic Indian cuisine. Good movies and marvelous music (if you'll purchase the earphones). All this plus Air-India's special service: gentle, considerate and authentically warm.

Ask your travel agent about Air-India's New York-London $432 fare — and ask him about Air-India.

Be prepared for a rave.

Senate Tax Panel Favors Curbs In Deducting for Office in Home

By EILEEN SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON, May 19—The Senate Finance Committee voted today to impose stricter limits on the tax deductions that may be taken for the use of part of one's residence for an office, for the expenses of attending business-conventions overseas, and for expenditures on vacation homes that are partly rented to others.

In the three areas, the committee changed the provisions of the tax revision bill passed last year by the House of Representatives.

In addition, the committee made a number of changes in the tax-incentive for export sales known as "DISC," which stands for Domestic-International Sales Corporations.

The committee's planned changes in the rules now governing DISC would reduce by $440 million, it is estimated, the $1.4 billion in tax savings chiefly for large corporations, now realized through the DISC provision. The House bill would have cut the benefits by $570 million.

Among the other changes approved by the committee was one reported to have been tailored to the needs of the Sun Oil Company. This would provide an exception to a provision of the 1975 tax act that prohibits oil companies from using paper losses on overseas drilling as an offset to income earned in the United States.

The rules the Finance Committee decided on for disallowing some expenses of attending conventions in foreign countries were considerably stricter than those approved by the House last year.

It decided, for instance, that no deductions should be permitted for the conventions outside the 50 states, Canada, Mexico and the Caribbean unless there was a good reason, such as a sizable foreign membership, for the organization, to hold a convention elsewhere.

The House bill prohibits deductions for more than two foreign conventions a year and limits the travel expenses to coach air-fare and living expenses to the per diem allowance the Government pays its employees. The amount varies from place to place.

On deductions for the cost of an office in one's home, the committee adopted essentially the same standards that are in the House bill. The home-office would have to be used regularly as a place of business or a place where business is conducted with customers or clients. Those using a home-office part-time such as freelance writers or consultants, could not deduct any home-office expenses that exceeded the amount of income produced.

The committee loosened a provision on vacation homes, allowing deductions for such residences could be deducted only if the owner did not use them for more than 14 days or 10 percent of the number of days they were rented to others. The House set the limit for the use of the owner at 14 days or 5 percent of the rental time.

The committee decided, unlike the House, that private sales of some types of arms and agricultural products should be eligible for DISC benefits. It changed the method of calculating the export sales to which the benefit would apply.

Senate Votes Assault Bill WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP)—The Senate passed and sent to the House today a bill making it a Federal crime to assault a Government mine inspector. A committee report on the bill said that since 1972 there have been 31 cases in which Federal mine inspectors were threatened or assaulted.

Study Sought by West Point Legal Staff Is Ruled Out by Secretary of the Army

By JAMES FERON
Special to The New York Times

WEST POINT, N.Y., May 19—Secretary of the Army Martin R. Hoffmann has denied a request by 10 members of the legal staff of the United States Military Academy for an investigation of the procedures being used by West Point in handling its cheating scandal.

The denial, received today at the Academy, suggested that the lawyers submit their allegations of widespread cheating and bad-faith practices by the cadet honor committee to the honor committee itself. The appeals boards of officers or the superintendent, Lieut. Gen. Sidney Berry.

One of the 10 lawyers, who declined to be identified, said: "It's a perfect Catch-22. Obviously we're not going to take our charges to these agencies because they are who we're accusing of initiating or condoning the wrongdoings."

He said the lawyers had been informed of the reply late this afternoon and would meet tomorrow to consider their next move. Asked if this might include a request for a Congressional investigation, the lawyer said:

"It could, but that would have to come from our clients [the cadets] because Army officers cannot petition Congress. I understand that some cadets have already asked their senators and congressmen to look into the matter."

An Army spokesman in Washington characterized Secretary Hoffmann's response as "the denial of a request for an extraordinary measure which was not needed for resolution of the current cases."

Forty-nine second classmen, or juniors, have been officially charged with cheating on a electrical engineering examination in March. They have charged that hundreds of others were involved, but that the academy is fearful of the adverse publicity such an investigation would attract.

The cadets are accused of violating the honor code, which states that a "cadet shall not lie, cheat or steal or tolerate those who do."

The only penalty is expulsion. One cadet has been officially charged with attempting to fix honor boards and others have been accused of actually doing so.

The Army spokesman said that Secretary Hoffmann had discussed the issue with Superintendent Berry and that they had agreed that an outside inquiry might be useful in the future, but that such an inquiry would not affect the current cases, which are subject to established procedures, including a final review by Secretary Hoffmann of any recommendation involving expulsion.

Another View
Capt. Daniel H. Sharporn, one of the lawyers and a graduate of West Point, said: "We're really disappointed. We can't understand why they're not doing what we ask. When something has gone wrong with the honor code, we should admit it and correct it."

Captain Sharporn, a member of the class of 1969 who was appointed to the Academy by President Ford, then a Michigan Congressman, said: "The talk of a future investigation really bothers me, because there's a document at West Point, the result of an earlier investigation, that shows there are problems with the honor code."

"It was an in-depth analysis of the code by academy officials," he said. "To read it is to see the handwriting on the wall. It seems to me that talk of a future investigation is worthless, considering what they already know."

The alleged "bad-faith practices" among members of the honor committee include: charges by cadets that range from questionable investigative practices to apparent violations of judicial procedures.

Cadets have given the lawyers notarized statements charging that friends of honor board members were intentionally bypassed although suspected of cheating and that honor committee leaders improperly influenced the boards, or juries.

Some cadets have testified before notaries public to conversations prior to the cheating scandal indicating that potential witnesses in other cases had been threatened, that charges had been manufactured and that evidence had been altered.

The first of the officer boards, which determine if the official charges of cheating by the cadet boards were based on sufficient evidence, is set for May 28, one of the lawyers said. The appeals are expected to last well into July. A cadet is entitled to legal counsel only when his case reaches the appeals board stage.

Three cadets have already resigned in the cheating scandal, and 49 others were cleared by the four honor boards that heard 101 cases initially. The cadet accused of jury tampering was on one of those boards.

The second classmen awaiting appeals boards have been transferred to different companies and have been told they can no longer represent the corps of cadets. They were banned, for example, from the traditional class ring ceremony and dance last month.

Beame Opens Campaign To Greet the Convention

Mayor Beame, predicting that the summer of 1976 would be "the most exciting for New York City in our lifetime" yesterday opened a campaign to welcome the Democratic National Convention.

At a reception at Bonwit Teller introducing an advertising and publicity effort designed to create a receptive spirit for the July 12-15 convention, which is expected to attract 25,000 people, Mr. Beame said:

"This is a real people-to-people event. Visitors to our city will see how proud New Yorkers are of their town."

Preston R. Tisch, chairman of the Citizens Committee for the Democratic National Convention, said a number of special events, including Operation Sail and other Bicentennial activities, would attract a record inflow of tourists throughout the summer.

ANESTHETIC MAKER WINS DAMAGE SUIT

LINCOLN, Neb., May 19 (UPI)—The Nebraska Supreme Court refused today to hold the manufacturer of the anesthetic drug, Innovar, responsible for brain damage to the mother of three children who has been technically alive but unconscious for the last five years.

The court unanimously affirmed the decision of a Douglas County District Court jury in favor of McNeil Laboratories, Inc. of Fort Washington, Pa., in a suit brought by Everett D. McDaniel of Omaha on behalf of his wife, Marjorie.

The suit was originally filed against the anesthesiologist, the hospital and the surgeon, attorneys for McNeil said that in all cases except McNeil's, a $650,000 settlement was reached in the action against nadian needs.

the anesthesiologist, Dr. Carl Boschuit, three days into the trial. The State Supreme Court said the evidence indicated that "departures from reasonable standards of care" by the operating room anesthesiologist were the "proximate cause of the brain damage which Mrs. McDaniel suffered."

Despite the settlements, Mrs. McDaniel continued the suit against McNeil.

Mrs. McDaniel suffered the brain damage in what was considered routine hemorrhoid surgery Feb. 2, 1971.

JUDGE REAFFIRMS Former Representative Irwin EVICTION ORDER Seeking Weicker's Senate Seat

Will Not Disqualify Himself in Terminal Market Case

By LAWRENCE FELLOWS
Special to The New York Times

Judge Benjamin J. Nolan of Bronx Civil Court yesterday reaffirmed his order for the eviction of a merchant from the Bronx Terminal Market.

The ruling came in the long fight of the Arol Development Corporation, which operates the market under lease from the city, to evict the Goodie Brand Packing Corporation, leader of a group of merchants seeking to void the lease.

Judge Nolan refused to disqualify himself from the case, as demanded by Goodie Brand, which cited a gift of cosmetics from the Arol Development Corporation to the judge's law secretary. The judge ruled that the gift, even if arguably improper, occurred well after the original eviction order had been issued and thus could not have influenced his decision.

Judge Nolan noted that the charge concerning the alleged impropriety of the gift was being investigated by Maurice H. Nadjar, the special state prosecutor for corruption in the criminal-justice system.

Goodie Brand said it would appeal the judge's decision. The company has sent a report on the gift to the grievance committee of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York.

The dossier includes an affidavit by Martin William Halbfinger, a lawyer for Arol, affirming that he delivered cartons of cosmetics last year to Judge Nolan's chambers and to the office for landlord-tenant

HARTFORD, May 19—Donald J. Irwin, a former Mayor of Norwalk and for three terms a Democratic member of Congress, declared today that he was a candidate for the United States Senate. He charged that Lowell P. Weicker Jr., the Republican incumbent, dispensed "warmed-over" Watergate while the country's strength waned and people were without jobs.

"I believe the majority in Connecticut want a change," Mr. Irwin said at a news conference in the Capitol here. "They want someone to represent them, and their interests in Washington, rather than the erratic, arrogant, egocentric display that has characterized Mr. Weicker's six years in Washington."

The Secretary of the State, Gloria Schaffer, another Democratic aspirant for the nomination, has referred to Senator Weicker—a familiar figure from the Senate's Watergate hearings—as a "self-proclaimed Goliath."

Mrs. Schaffer has a considerable head start over Mr. Irwin; she has been campaigning hard for a year. Lieut. Gov. Robert Killian dropped out of the running for the Democratic nomination in January.

Christopher J. Dodd, the freshman Congressman from Connecticut's Second District, which covers the eastern half of the state, thought about running and then decided last month to seek re-election to the House of Representatives instead.

Three aspirants are trying to gather enough petition signatures to get on the ballot. They are Robert S. Loomis of East Glastonbury, of the Libertarian Party; Theodore M. Prior of Hartford, of the Crispus Attucks Party, named for a black man killed by the British in the Boston Massacre 200 years ago; and Andrew Jon Shapiro of Hartford, an independent. To get on the ballot by petition, a candidate needs 10,849 signatures—1 percent of the total votes cast in the last senatorial election in Connecticut.

Mr. Irwin, who will be 50 years old in September, was defeated by Mr. Weicker when Mr. Irwin was running for re-election to the House of Representatives in 1968. Now, by offering himself as a conservative alternative, to both Mrs. Schaffer and Mr. Weicker, Mr. Irwin thinks he can win.

BOSTON DECISION LIKELY THIS WEEK

Ford Denies Political Role in Bid to Test Busing

By ERNEST HOLSENDOLPH Special to The New York Times WASHINGTON, May 19— President Ford said today that Attorney General Edward H. Levi would decide this week whether to select Boston as the appropriate case to test court-ordered busing of school children to help achieve integration.

In an informal meeting with reporters, the President denied that the plan to ask for a Supreme Court review of busing was a political move and cited as proof the fact that the plan was disclosed too late for it to affect the Michigan primary yesterday. However, busing was not a major issue in that state.

Mr. Ford has long been opposed to court-ordered busing for desegregation, and the White House disclosed today that as long ago as last Nov. 20, the President notified the Department of Justice to look for an appropriate case that could be used to open the door for a high court review of busing.

Today, Mr. Ford said he was "encouraged with the progress to date" in developing strategies to improving education short of busing.

It is believed that we have ways to achieve results without the tragedies that have happened in some of our cities," the President said.

Meanwhile, Attorney General Levi and his staff were reportedly continuing efforts to decide whether the busing decision by Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. of the Federal District Court in Boston was an appropriate one for review.

to start in the fall of 1976. Under the order, complete desegregation is expected by the end of the 1978-79 school year.

An administration request to review the Boston case and also to reopen the Supreme Court's Swann decision in 1971 reportedly would be aimed at limiting the power of judges to order sweeping busing orders.

Civil rights groups and others have warned that even the suggestion by the Government that the executive branch is less than fully supportive of busing orders would help to encourage disobedience to the law and a spread of violent resistance.

Senator Edward W. Brooke, Republican of Massachusetts, expressed his objections in a meeting with Mr. Levi this morning. Mr. Brooke emerged to tell reporters that the Attorney General still had not decided whether to select Boston, but was weighing "both sides."

Yesterday, Roy Wilkins, director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, led a delegation of civil rights supporters to Mr. Levi's office to encourage him not to appeal the Boston busing order. However, opponents of busing have strongly urged intervention in the case.

William T. Coleman Jr., the Secretary of Transportation and the only member of the Cabinet who is black, met with Mr. Levi and Solicitor General Robert H. Bork this afternoon for an hour and a half.

Even if the Federal order to bus about 24,000 youngsters was set aside in Boston, Senator Brooke said, the school system would still be under compulsion to transport some 17,000 youths because of a state education board order.

from the better-educated liberal wing of the party—made up heavily of college graduates and those in professional and white-collar occupations.

The Michigan results differed little. About 40 percent of the Udall voters in both Wisconsin and Michigan called themselves liberal. Similarly, about half in both states said they had attended college, many more than among the Carter voters.

There was no indication in Michigan that Mr. Udall had expanded his appeal to the blue-collar families that have traditionally been such an important ingredient of the Democratic majority. Indeed, if anything, the Michigan survey suggests that the Udall vote has become even more white collar.

In Wisconsin about four of every 10 Carter and Udall voters came from white collar or professional families. But in Michigan nearly half of the Udall voters did, compared with only a little more than a quarter of the Carter voters.

The Michigan results suggest that the seemingly ineffectual and dormant liberal wing of the party might have been more potent had the liberal field not been so divided until now. In New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Wisconsin and even Tuesday in Michigan, Mr. Udall would very likely have won had the name of former Senator Fred R. Harris or Oklahoma not been on the ballot.

Assuming he would have picked up the bulk of the 4,323 votes cast for Mr. Harris in Michigan, Mr. Udall might well have overcome the 2,000-vote gap that divided him from Mr. Carter.

At the same time there have been indications to support the notion that, to paraphrase Representative John Conyers Jr. of Michigan, Mr. Carter's support is a mile wide and an inch deep. Both the Times/CBS News, as well as private surveys conducted for both Mr. Carter and Mr. Udall, suggest that the Carter support is soft.

On the other hand, Mr. Carter may have been hurt in Michigan by the cross-over provision in that state. The survey found that about half of the former Wallace backers who voted this year picked up Republican ballots, mostly to vote for Mr. Reagan. Those that stayed in the Democratic column voted heavily for Mr. Carter, suggesting that he may have done much better had the Wallace people not been permitted to wander.

The survey also contains hints of Mr. Carter's potential strength against the Republicans in November. When asked whom they would vote for in hypothetical races pitting Mr. Carter against both Mr. Ford and Mr. Reagan, substantial numbers of Republicans indicated they would defect to the Democrat if their candidate lost the nomination.

That is, nearly four of every 10 Reagan voters said they would vote for Mr. Carter in a Carter-Ford race, while over a third of the Ford voters would desert to the Democrat in a Carter-Reagan race.

The Times and CBS News will continue their survey coverage of the 1976 primaries in the California, New Jersey and Ohio election on June 8. Assistant The Times is Prof. Gary R. Orren of the government department at Harvard University.

Carter Gets Big Lead In Poll Held in Jersey

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J., May 19 (UPI)—Jimmy Carter holds a wide lead among Democrats competing in the New Jersey Presidential primary June 8, according to a poll released today.

The poll, conducted by the Eagleton Institute of Politics of Rutgers University, said that the former Georgia Governor was the choice of 51 percent of the Democrats questioned about their preference for the party's nominee.

The closest contender to Mr. Carter was an uncommitted delegate slate that has been portrayed as supporting either Senator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota or Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California. The uncommitted slate was preferred by 16 percent.

The Newer Faces Won in Maryland

By BEN A. FRANKLIN
Special to The New York Times

BALTIMORE, May 19—The "changed political chemistry" that Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California correctly sensed might carry him to victory over Jimmy Carter in Maryland was at work, too, for other candidates here.

Unofficial returns from yesterday's voting showed that in 20 days of campaigning Mr. Brown was able to outdistance Mr. Carter in nearly every section of this demographically diverse state, among blacks and whites, in urban and suburban areas.

The same pattern also lifted a number of statewide candidates here to victories at the expense of more established figures.

Swept away was the comeback bid of former Senator Joseph D. Tydings, who was overwhelmingly defeated yesterday even in his home county, for the Democratic senatorial nomination by a less well-known candidate, Representative Paul S. Sarbanes of Baltimore.

With all of the 1,346 precincts reporting, the tally was: Sarbanes 299,558 (56 percent); Tydings 187,632 (35 percent); in the Washington suburb of Montgomery County, Frank Mankiewicz, the journalist and former campaign aide to the late Senator Robert F. Kennedy and to Senator George McGovern of South Dakota, lost a bid for the Democratic nomination for the Eighth Congressional District seat to a young lawyer, Larry Davis.

And here, the Third District, in North Baltimore, City Councilwoman Barbara A. Mikulski, who lost a senatorial race two years ago, defeated some of the city's most formidable politicians in a 10-candidate race for the Democratic nomination to succeed Mr. Sarbanes in the House.

Miss Mikulski's margin was 2 to 1 over her nearest rival, State Senator Joseph Curran Jr. She is considered an instant favorite in the November election against the Republican nominee, Samuel Calton.

Governor Brown came close in the seven-candidate Presidential preference race, winning half the vote cast by about 45 percent of Maryland's 1.2 million registered Democrats. Left in the dust were Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona; Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama; Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington; Ellen McCormack, the anti-abortion candidate, and former Senator Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma.

Mandel Helped Brown

Mr. Brown undoubtedly benefited here in the city from the stop-Carter efforts in his behalf by Gov. Marvin Mandel, long influential in Baltimore machine politics, who had quietly ordered out a pro-Brown vote. But he would have won without Mr. Mandel's help.

Mr. Brown ran well ahead not only in the city but in Maryland's three largest suburban counties, where elections in this state are usually decided. Only on the rural Maryland Eastern Shore did Mr. Carter, former Governor of Georgia, prevail.

The Brown victory gave new political luster to two elected county executives—Theodore Venetoulis of suburban Baltimore county, who was instrumental in persuading the California Governor to come here late last month, and Winfield Kelly of Prince Georges County, a middle-income suburb of Washington, who said last night that he had "delivered" the nearly 5,000-vote Brown victory margin there.

In both Mr. Venetoulis's county, the state's largest with a suburban and industrial blue collar mix, and in Montgomery County near Washington, one of the wealthiest suburban areas in the United States, Mr. Brown's share of the vote was over 50 percent.

1,840 VOTERS POLLED IN MICHIGAN SURVEY

The New York Times and CBS News polled 1,840 Michigan voters yesterday as they left the polling places. Of these, 1,002 were Republicans and 838 were Democrats.

Twenty voting precincts were chosen in the state, and within each precinct each voter had an equal chance of being selected.

One possible source of error in a survey such as this is sampling error. One can say with 95 percent certainty that results based upon the entire sample differ by no more than 6.5 points, in either direction, from what would have been obtained by interviews with all voters in Michigan. For Republicans and Democrats alone, the margin of error would be 8.6 points.

However, as in any survey of public opinion, this margin of error is undoubtedly somewhat larger because of unavoidable imperfections in the way the survey was constructed and because some voters refused to be interviewed.

Ford Elated by Victories; Sees First-Ballot Sweep

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 19—Alabama and Georgia, the official said. "We didn't understand it soon enough," the White House aide said. "We finally diagnosed the problem. We either had to compete within this expanded pool of [conservative] voters or further expand the pool."

Such an expansion began yesterday, according to the President's strategists. They acknowledged, however, that Mr. Reagan did not campaign at all in Maryland, and that the effort to enlist mainstream Republicans to save the Ford candidacy in Michigan was enhanced by his favorite son status there.

The task they now face, said one officer of the President Ford Committee, is to galvanize moderate and progressive Republicans in support of the President.

"Ford has got to be pictured in the mainstream and Reagan off on the right bank, so to speak," the official said.

If the technique is successful and Mr. Ford wins the three June 8 primaries, he will enter the Republican National Convention with the momentum to win on the opening ballot, and the President's aides said, with a more centrist posture that may facilitate an effort to seem less dogmatically conservative if that is useful in the contest with the Democratic nominees in the fall.

The potentially definitive California primary accordingly will be approached through two distinguishable White House campaigns.

The President, who will depart Saturday on a four-day campaign trip to Nevada, Oregon and California, told reporters this afternoon that he represented "peace, prosperity and trust."

A campaign aide said that Mr. Ford's "positive" themes would be balanced by some form of "anti-Reagan campaign" by the President's advocates. But it is the latter form of the dual approach that is in the design stage and must, according to the aide, be shaped so as not to seem "essentially negative."

The inherent difficulties posed by a positively negative campaign prompted tempered confidence in Mr. Ford's political planners.

"Everything else breaks even up to June 8, we can win two of the three primaries that day and be in good shape," Mr. Kaye said. "With three of three we'd be in great shape."

Throwing caution to the winds whipping across the White House south lawn, Mr. Ford said that "yesterday was a great day. It restored the momentum that is needed in the remaining primaries and in the caucus states. We're going to keep it going."

Ronald Reagan arriving in Reno yesterday. The Nevada primary will be held Tuesday.

Reagan Is in Nevada to Change His

By DOUGLAS E. KNEELAND
Special to The New York Times

RENO, May 19—Ronald Reagan came to the gambling state of Nevada today to try to change his luck after suffering heavy losses yesterday in Republican Presidential primary elections in Michigan and Maryland.

The former California Governor was not surprised by his defeat in Maryland, where he had not campaigned, and was philosophical about his almost 2-to-1 loss to the President in Mr. Ford's home state of Michigan, where he had spent only a little more than 24 hours on the hustings.

Asked today whether he thought a victory in Michigan would have clinched the nomination for him after his five consecutive victories in six other recent primaries, Mr. Reagan said:

"I don't know whether we would have wrapped it up or not. Certainly that race was a crucial one for him, and not for me. It was a make-or-break for him. And we never did believe we would do even as well as we have done there in the number of delegates."

At an airport news conference here as he opened his campaign for next Tuesday's Nevada primary, he said, "If there had been some kind of miracle there, it would have been quite a blow to him."

But he added with a shrug that the results were "about what you'd expect."

Though he spoke last week of the outside chance of an upset victory over Mr. Ford in Michigan, neither he nor his advisers ever seemed to place much hope in that.

Some of his aides had talked about the possibility of Mr. Reagan's getting 40 percent of the votes there. But today they seemed more convinced that the Ford camp had done a good job of persuading the public that the President was in serious trouble in Michigan so it could reap more psychological benefits from the landslide triumph.

"You've got to give them credit," one Reagan aide said with a tinge of admiration in his voice.

"We got almost exactly what we projected when we laid this thing out months ago," a senior Reagan adviser said. "Oh, when you got into the state and the local people got around and got carried away, you begin to think you could get 40 percent."

Another Reagan adviser said with a smile, "We still got 30 delegates." (The actual count was 29.)

No Gloom Visible
If there was any gloom among the Reagan forces today, it was well disguised.

Most staff members reminded anyone who asked about yesterday's . . . defeats that their candidate was still well ahead of delegates and was favored in most of next week's primaries in Nevada, Idaho, Oregon, Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky.

Some did acknowledge, however, that Mr. Ford's victories might give him enough momentum to win in states such as Kentucky, Tennessee, and possibly Arkansas, where the Reagan people believe they now hold narrow leads.

The Reagan organization continues to insist that it is considerably ahead of its early projections on delegate totals at this stage in the long primary season.

After yesterday's contests, Mr. Reagan had 508 committed delegates to Mr. Ford's 432, and 382 remained uncommitted. A total of 1,130 are needed for one-half of the Republican nomination at the Republican National Convention City next August.

As he opened his campaign, Mr. Reagan a rousing welcome crowd of several thousands at the Nugget Hall here before he addressed other supporters Elko and Las Vegas of the week he will in Arkansas, Tennessee and Oregon.

Mr. Reagan was about an article in The New York Times that reported he had no Federal income in 1970 and relatively small amounts, considering his income in preceding years.

"There was an in an Eastern paper not paid," Mr. Reagan said. "That has been an

Democratic Planners Attack Kissinger

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 19—The Democratic Platform Committee turned its attention to foreign affairs today and heard a series of party specialists denounce the policies of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

Many of those who were critical of Mr. Kissinger have been mentioned as possible successors to his post if a Democrat is elected President.

Today was the third of four days of hearings by the committee this week. It will meet again next month to prepare a platform for submission to the Democratic National Convention in July.

The consensus within the party on domestic issues that was so apparent in the first two days of hearings was missing today when foreign policy was considered.

There was little of the tension that existed in 1968 and 1972 when the foreign affairs debate revolved almost exclusively around the war in Vietnam. But the residue of past bitterness appeared several times today.

At one point, Richard W. Bailey, a Michigan member of the Platform Committee, asked Eugene V. Rostow, Under Secretary of State in the Johnson Administration, what he had "learned from our experience in Vietnam."

Mr. Rostow replied that he believed the country's principal emotion over that war was one of "hurt pride," and that the main lesson he had learned was "if you use force, you had better win."

There were sighs and grimaces from some members of the committee. When Mr. Rostow

Despite the range of their positions on many issues, the witnesses united in attacking Mr. Kissinger.

George W. Ball, an Under Secretary of State in the Kennedy and Johnson Administrations, accused Mr. Kissinger of pursuing "a strategy of maneuver and manipulation" and of having an "obsession" with "personal diplomacy."

Such a policy, Mr. Ball said, "risks subverting our institutions, puts a premium on ruthlessness at the highest places, creates an obsession with what is banally—and for the most part, improperly—called 'national security' and provides a factious justification for trespasses on individual freedom."

Prof. Zbigniew Brzezinski of Columbia University, Jimmy Carter's principal foreign affairs adviser, criticized Mr. Kissinger for making what he termed "apocalyptic predictions" about the effect of Communists in the Italian Government and said that such predictions would be "self-fulfilling."

Adm. Elmo R. Zumwalt, retired, former Chief of Naval Operations who is now a Democratic candidate for the Senate from Virginia, was clearly referring to Mr. Kissinger when he asserted, "Contrary to the views of some of our more temperamental officials, critical analysis of our Government's foreign policy is not an irresponsible act."

The parade of witnesses, beginning at 9 A.M. and continuing past the supper hour, proved tiring to members of the Platform Committee. Many of them seemed to tune in and out, depending on the quality of the presentations.

Mr. Ball's speech, for example, was delivered in eloquent, metaphorical language, and he appeared to capture the committee's full attention. He noted Mr. Kissinger's penchant for surprise announcements and shrewd diplomacy, then said:

"Inevitably, the spell of such dramatic devices began to wear off. The American people are too canny to be distracted by circuses for any sustained period. They added up the results and began to question how much it all meant—especially when illusion failed to follow illusion, when the prestidigitator waved his wand to find the rabbit had hopped away."

Many of the committee members smiled, but it was difficult to tell whether they were doing so at the observation or the oratory.

Some witnesses called for more defense spending. Others believed there should be less. Some sought closer relations with the Soviet Union. Others decried the policies of détente.

Some argued that the foremost task of the next Administration would be to limit nuclear arms, while others declared that, first and foremost, the United States must maintain military strength superior to that of the Soviet Union.

It seemed clear that the foreign policy plank of the platform, if it is to be at all specific, will be one of the most difficult to write.

Actions by Supreme Court

WASHINGTON, May 19—The Supreme Court took the following actions today:

CIVIL RIGHTS
By an 8-to-0 vote, the Court ruled that the Federal Power Commission has only limited power to deal with job discrimination by the companies it regulates.

CRIMINAL
Without comment, the court declined to review—and thus left in effect—a Federal appeals' court ruling that in effect required a Federal District judge to accept the terms of the plea bargain between the special Watergate prosecution and Jake Jacobsen, a key government witness in the bribery trial of former Secretary of the Treasury John B. Connally.

LABOR
The Court asked Solicitor General Robert H. Bork to file a brief giving the Government's views on the validity of a Federal regulation under which states may deny welfare benefits for children whose fathers are unemployed because they are on strike.

TAX
At the request of the Solicitor General, the Court agreed to review a California court's ruling that allowed California to impose a tax on possessory interests in United States Forest Service employees living in Government housing quarters on tax-exempt land.

VENUE
Affirming the ruling of a Texas court that had considered the case, the court upheld a Texas statute that established different venue, or location of lawsuit, requirements for domestic and foreign corporations.

FREE SPEECH
By 7-to-1 the Court struck down, as unconstitutional, an ordinance of Oradell, N.J., that required anyone who wanted to go from house to house for a charitable or political cause to first give the local police written notice.

HOMOSEXUALITY
The Court declined to reconsider a ruling on March 29 that states may prosecute and imprison people for committing homosexual acts even when both parties to an act are consenting adults and the act occurs in private.

INDIANS
In a victory for the Northern Cheyenne tribe, the Court ruled unanimously that persons "allotted" individual portions of land on the Northern Cheyenne reservations in Montana do not have vested rights in the mineral deposits under those portions.

F.P.C. RIGHTS ROLE IS FOUND LIMITED

Supreme Court Says Agency Cannot Order Job Equality

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, May 19—Rejecting the arguments of several civil rights groups representing minorities and women, the Supreme Court ruled 8 to 0 today that the Federal Power Commission has only limited authority to deal with job discrimination on the basis of race, national origin or sex by the industries it regulates.

The logic of the majority opinion, joined by seven of the justices, appears at least potentially applicable to other regulatory agencies as well. In a second decision today, with civil rights implications, the Court struck down as unconstitutional a New Jersey town that required anyone who wanted to make house-to-house calls or solicitations on behalf of a charity or a political campaign or "cause" to first notify the local police in writing. The vote was 7 to 1, with William Rehnquist the dissenter and John Paul Stevens not participating.

However, the Court's two most liberal justices, William J. Brennan Jr. and Thurgood Marshall, concurred in only part of the opinion supported by the other justices in the majority. They contended, in effect, that the others had not taken a sufficiently strong stand against such ordinances.

In the Federal Power Commission case, the court ruled that because the F.P.C. has the duty to prevent its regulated companies from charging rates based on illegal or unnecessary labor costs, the commission should disallow rates to the extent that costs are "demonstrably the product of a regulatee's discriminatory employment practices."

The court, whose decision affirmed that of a lower Federal court that had first considered the case, cited the lower court's description of possible examples of such costs—without, as it noted, "necessarily endorsing" them. Among them were labor costs incurred in the form of back pay awards to employees who had proved illegal job discrimination, and the costs of legal proceedings in such cases.

scribing the commission's duties, of the "public interest" involved in the industries that the commission is to regulate.

Today's case was started by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other groups who asked the commission to issue a rule requiring equal employment opportunity by the companies it regulates. When the commission refused, the groups took the matter to court, contending that the statutory talk of "public interest" gave the commission the authority to issue the proposed rule.

The Supreme Court rejected this argument, saying: "The use of the words 'public interest' in the gas and power acts is not a directive to the commission to seek to eradicate discrimination, but rather to promote the orderly production of plentiful supplies of electric energy and natural gas at just and reasonable rates."

Statutes describing the authority of other regulatory agencies also use the term "public interest." The Court, citing an earlier decision involving the Interstate Commerce Commission, noted: "This Court's cases have consistently held that the use of the words 'public interest' in a regulatory statute is not a broad license to promote the general public welfare. Rather the words take meaning from the purposes of the regulatory legislation."

School Lunch Utopia? No Impossible Dream

"Choice on a cafeteria line is bunk," says the director of Milwaukee's food program. "You could have two or even three choices a day and there would still be some kids who didn't like anything available."

By MIMI SHERATON

School food does not have to be bad. As hard as that may be to believe, considering the food served in most New York City schools, there is a good deal of encouraging evidence to the contrary. Many schools throughout the country achieve more than minimum standards of palatability, all on limited budgets and within the requirements of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Based on a study of lunches in 150 schools in five cities, the key to success appears to be the amount of preparation done in the school kitchen. The formula, at its simplest, is the more the better.

If there is a school-lunch paradise, it is Milwaukee, and the lively, energetic perfectionist who is the director of that program, Thomas J. Farley, has won a number of prestigious food service awards.

Boasting a 70 percent participation out of an 105,000 enrollment, with 22,000 free lunches, Mr. Farley prepares meals from scratch in almost every school, baking everything on the premises, including hamburgers, rolls, and transporting hot cooked food to the few schools that have no kitchens. He does all of that at what he says is the lowest priced lunch in any major city in the United States, a figure he compiles each year by requesting prices from 50 large cities.

Second of two articles

Elementary students pay 30 cents, while high schools charge 35 cents per lunch. The program is self-supporting and receives no municipal funds to supplement Federal and state subsidies.

Every school in Milwaukee offers the same lunch on a given day and, unlike the New York high schools, no additional foods are sold à la carte nor are students permitted off the premises for lunch.

Leafy green salads with a choice of dressings, delicately seasoned Swedish meat balls, convincing lasagne and crisp golden grilled cheese sandwiches are among the understandable favorites.

Asked how he could produce such good food at such low prices, Mr. Farley gave several reasons.

"For one thing, remember you get better food," he said. "Why that meal pack stuff could gag a maggot. Since we prepare the same meal for all schools we get better bulk prices, have less waste, and pay lower delivery charges since wholesalers do not have to figure out which school gets what."

"And, of course," he continued, "it's just plain cheaper to do your own cooking than to have someone else do it for you. Our labor costs are about 30 percent lower than New York's, but even more important, we do not pay a differentiated wage scale. We can rotate kitchen workers so they learn all jobs and become well-trained."

Choose Menus

If Milwaukee food personnel hear few gripes it is mainly because two students from each of 33 high schools meet seven times a year with Mr. Farley to relay student complaints and suggestions, decide on new menus, and try out new recipes and products. Having had a voice in the menu planning through their representatives, students do not resent menus imposed on them by adults.

When asked if the lack of choice might not be a shortcoming, Mr. Farley explained: "Remember, our students make a choice when they choose their menus. Choice on a cafeteria line is bunk. You could have two or even three choices a day and there would still be some kids who didn't like anything available."

As for being able to produce the food

"The teacher's place is in the lunchroom," insists Herbert Kohl, the educator. "All sorts of things can be taught to kids through food. As organized now, the lunch period is the most wasted educational opportunity in the school day."

Foods Children Love

It is not really difficult to figure out what children like to eat. In any city, among children of all ages and backgrounds, there is almost total agreement on favorites. It is a tribute to the Italian kitchen that its specialties, such as pizza, meat balls, meat sauce, spaghetti, lasagne and ravioli make up a sort of gastronomic Esperanto, understood by all palates.

Fried chicken, peanut butter (abhorred by parents, adored by children), hamburgers, and, to a slightly lesser degree, chili, hot dogs, tuna fish, grilled cheese sandwiches and fried fish round out the list. The only vegetables eaten consistently were potatoes — french fried, puffs or chips — carrot sticks and buttered corn kernels. Children who like other vegetables are regarded as the lunatic fringe by their peers.

Most children love sandwiches, often making them out of such unlikely candidates as spaghetti and pizza, and they also seem to relish oranges, bananas and canned fruits. Milk is sometimes a favorite — far more popular when chocolate flavored. As much as one might deplore the intake of sugar and artificial chocolate flavoring, it seems worth that risk to be sure children will get the calcium, protein and vitamins in the milk.

While it might seem simple to plan menus with the favorite choices, to do he does in New York with the city's wage scale, Mr. Farley said, "Of course. But I would have to have the same commitment from the Board of Education in New York as I got in Milwaukee. That is to install cooking kitchens in new schools and add them to existing buildings. Ours here is a 20-year plan."

"It would cost more, but could still be done within Federal, state and municipal allowances. Not that I would want to have that job, of course. It's possible that there's just no way to be right in New York."

Like Milwaukee, New Orleans also cooks the same lunch from scratch, for all schools in the city each day. Every afternoon, students in classrooms are blissfully distracted from studies by the sweet smell of freshly baked rolls being taken from the oven. Entrees such as red beans and rice, chili, Italian specialties and even shark are seasoned to suit the spice-loving New Orleans palate.

Chicago and Newark, both of which utilize the same four lunch systems as New York, have the same record of success and failure — good lunches when cooked on the premises, mediocre to poor lunches when comprised of meal packs and bulk convenience choices.

New York does a much better job than either, however, with the basic soup and sandwich lunch.

As a group, some of the best lunches in New York were those cooked from the basics up — in District 1 on the Lower East Side. Three years ago, the local school board chose to administer its own lunch program.

Throwing out all meal packs, bulk convenience and basic lunches at the demand mostly of parents, the local board hired its own personnel, developed its own sources for food, and planned its menus, taking advantage of all Federal and state subsidies and donated commodities.

No Kitchens

Nine old schools with no kitchens receive meals from cooking kitchens in heated conveyors just before lunch. Much fresh food is used, supplemented with about the same range of convenience items used in cooking kitchens operated by the city's school lunch bureau.

So satisfied are the parents in this district that they voiced strong opposition when the recently completed Public School 142 was equipped only for bulk convenience foods.

When the District 1 board threatened not to open the school until a cooking kitchen was installed, a range and venting system were added.

But the single best group of school lunches sampled in New York were those served at yeshivas, under the Board of Jewish Education. Since these schools qualify for all subsidies and donated commodities, they must meet government standards. In addition, because their food must be kosher, and such convenience items are either not available or extremely expensive, they are practically required to do all cooking from scratch.

Even considering the advantage these schools have by catering to a homogeneous group with the same eating habits, and not having to meet union wage scales, they do an extraordinary job of turning out delicious food.

Beautiful vegetable and bean soups, cold beet borscht, elaborate, crisp salads, vegetable chow mein, and pizza made with donated flour are among the dairy specialties.

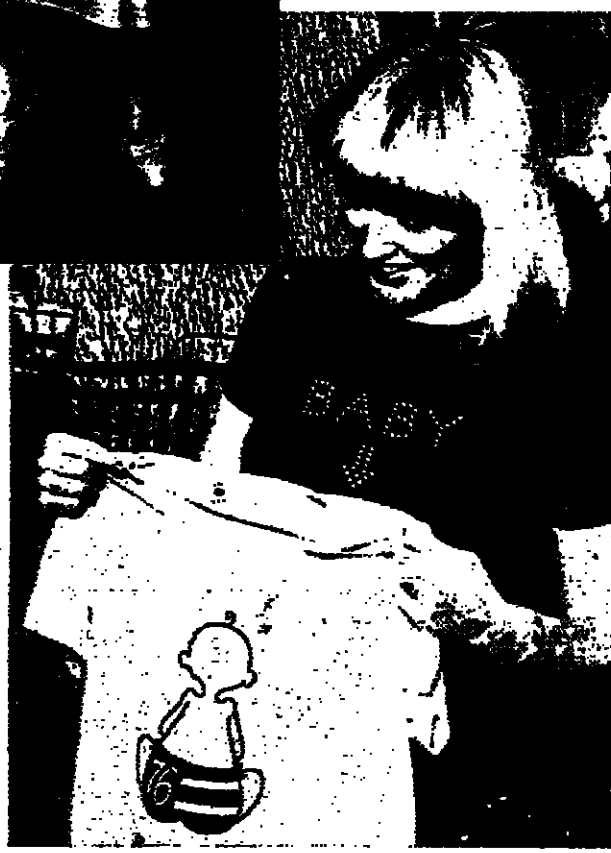

Meat kitchens add expertly seasoned goulash, and convincing Italian meat balls and sauce, or inventive entrees such as crisply breaded schnitzels cut from turkey roll. And the cakes and cookies could compete with those at quality neighborhood bakeries.

Other concerns with the lunch program should include the drabness of lunchrooms in the old buildings and their sterility in newer ones, and the fact that children are not taught to pick up things dropped on the floor. In addition, there should be concern over the combined residual effects of the additives in the vast amounts of convenience foods served and which educate young palates to accept those foods when they are adult.

Certainly one of the more serious shortcomings is the lack of teacher supervision in lunchrooms. The innovative educator, Herbert Kohl, said in an interview, "The teacher's place is in the lunchroom. . . . Albert Shanker will hate me for saying this, but it's true. All sorts of things can be taught to kids through food. . . . As organized now, the lunch period is the most wasted educational opportunity in the school day."

Shaping the Beauty of Wood Into Abstractions and Realities

By LISA HAMMEL
Wood is a material that lends itself beautifully to sculptured forms, but some of the most beautiful "sculpture" is found in the furniture of contemporary wood artisans.

A small show now at the Florence Duhi gallery offers an interesting view of that sculptural crossover from the utilitarian to the abstract in the work of three artists. Robert Whitley does furniture, but with strong sculptural lines. His library steps, for example, soar sinuously upward, in strong contrast to straight, slender vertical supports. A chair, viewed from a slight angle, becomes — in the harmonious curves of legs, arms and back — an essay in rhythm.

Mark Lindquist does mostly small objects — bowls, containers, as well as some nonfunctional pieces — but the emphasis is all on form, and the unusual grain effects of the wood. A little table with a curving pedestal probably could not be used as a table, for example, because its top slants downward somewhat. But the interest of it is in the shape.

Stephen Foss is completely involved in abstraction. His convoluted, beautifully grained sculptures twist in and out upon themselves like highly intricate puzzles. And with each slight turn of the sculptured form, a complete-

It's not hard to announce an impending birth these days. The maternity sections of department stores and the specialty boutiques are inundated with T-shirts that read "Baby," "Stork Club," "Construction Below" and "Je Suis Enceinte" (French for "I am pregnant").

For those who are conceited but think their protruding abdomens are sufficient notification, there are plenty of other choices.

"The fall was a disaster," Helen Chafoules, manager of the maternity shop at Saks Fifth Avenue said when asked about business. "Now there are happy pregnant women standing in line to buy. I had one customer in recently, who was expecting her 10th child, and she was buying an entirely new wardrobe."

Whatever the reason for the upturn, a tour of Saks, Bloomingdale's, Alexander's and three boutiques — Mater's Market, Lady Madonna and Reborn — showed good selections available in every category from tennis outfits to formal gowns.

At Saks, one can assemble a mix-and-match wardrobe of olive drab cottons including solid long pants ($14), shorts ($8), skirt ($18), and striped unic top ($29) and skirt ($20).

For cool days, Saks has a classic long-sleeved polyester shirtdress ($74). But the racks are mainly filled with designs for hot weather. Either a dainty flowered cotton dress with sheer batiste cape sleeves ($43) or a crinkled gingham balloon sleeved dress ($38) would be perfect for country club evenings. For dressier occasions, there are a half-dozen long outfits, including a black sarong-effect dress ($68).

Bloomingdale's does not have anything for important evenings but compensates with plenty for the office, the beach and the athletic field. Two tiny footprints decorate a mint green or sunny yellow T-shirt design by Betsy Johnson made in two versions: as a pants outfit ($38) or a dress ($28).

For the athlete, there are bright sweatshirts with striped necklines and cuffs. The hooded jacket is $32, the pullover, $28. A brown Qiana halter top bathing suit is especially sleek ($38).

Down the street at Alexander's, pants range from $5.99 to $12.99, with crinkly Calcutta cotton in a bivy of colors a practical buy at $11.99. Plain T-shirts are $8.49. A T-shirt dress in a bird print for $13.99 "is just the thing to wear when the office gives you a baby shower," Pauline Eisen, a sales clerk, said.

So far, so good for the average-size woman, who normally fits in size 6 to 12 or 14. But what is the woman who is large to begin with to do?

Lane Bryant is virtually the only source for maternity clothes in sizes up to 46. The customer who takes sizes smaller than 18 will find a good choice in every category, but the one who requires anything more than a 16 has a smaller selection.

There are a variety of pants and tops, but the store carries no large-size maternity bathing suits or shorts. Dresses are limited to four styles: a rayon cap sleeve design in a stork print that comes in blue and white or tan and white is $18, a brown cotton print sundress is $16, an unadorned short orange shift is $22 and a crinkled cotton natural or navy caftan is $30.

"For evening we send them to the better dress departments that have lots of A-lines and tents," Eleanor Fisher, the department manager, explained.

Mater's Market, 231 East 53d Street, has some of the most original and highly styled designs in town.

"I noticed that women were becoming pregnant at an older age and had more money to spend, but they were having a difficult time finding elegant things to wear to business dinners and such," Myrna Tarnower said recalling her decision to go

Holding On for Dear Death

By ANATOLE MOJTABAI

THE 400 EELS OF SIGMUND FREUD. By A. G. Mojtabai. 258 pages. Simon & Schuster. $7.95.

"When Sigmund Freud was a young medical student, he wrote a significant historical paper for which he dissected 400 eels. Freud went to the trouble of dissecting 400 eels to make sure his conclusions were founded on fact. This is the sort of image that charms one in A. G. Mojtabai's second novel. Naturally, you find yourself comparing Freud's dissection of those 400 eels with his later dissection of human personality, and no doubt the tension between these two examples is what interests the author too. The rational versus the irrational: Perhaps this is what most good novels are about. Mrs. Mojtabai likes to tease the issue. She is too wise to take sides. 'The 400 Eels of Sigmund Freud' is about an educational experiment in which a group of unusually gifted high school students are invited to work for one summer under the supervision of distinguished scientists. Their projects include such subjects as the feeding habits of obese mice and the response of female rabbits to pseudopregnancies.

A. G. Mojtabai

Discipline is the operative word in Four Winds, the mansion by the sea where the students live and work. Discipline is the only way of collecting and focusing the centrifugal, self-dispersing impulses of the species known as Homo sapiens. If the rational can be given a head start in the very young, they will be spared years of wanton human error. There to illustrate and encourage order are the Chief, a once-celebrated scientist who has now degenerated into a mere administrator, and his wife, Ethel, a former nurse who put him through medical school and "made him what he is," as she puts it with unconscious irony.

So Much Mashed Potatoes

The young people are not difficult to discipline: They want to work, prefer it to play. They even resent the mandatory weekly baseball game and swimming. The difficulty lies, of course, in the disciplinarians. The Chief is a compulsive philanthropist, seeing in his meaningless encounters a reassertion of everything he had to sublimate in his youth. He is trying to live backward. There is a fine moment in which he signs himself up by thrusting his eyeglasses into a mound of mashed potatoes on his plate, as if to say that is not what I want to see, what I hunger for, why man was given eyes. The rational is just so much mashed potatoes.

His wife boasts that their mynah bird sleeps in their bedroom, but with only a terrible silence for it to mimic, it dies. Ethel needs an emotional outlet even more than most unhappy people, but she is one of those women who can visualize only a catastrophic explosion of blood and guts if ever they let go. And so she holds on, for dear death, so to speak, and her spirit haunts the school.

She is hard put to find fault: The students are brilliant and dedicated, too busy to resent her interfering ways—all but one, Isaiah, whose principal offense is playing the violin. True, he plays it on his own time, but this does not mitigate the offense in her eyes. The music has gone out of her life and she will not have it in her school. It is enough that her husband fiddles around. She is determined to silence every siren song.

Mrs. Mojtabai makes it plain that Ethel is not entirely at fault. Isaiah is a natural irritant, a metaphor for the random element in life that science cannot coerce. His originality, which is considerable, includes disorder, or rather a private form of order only he can perceive. He will not come down from the cosmic to confront Ethel on her own grounds. He is opposed, on principle, to the picaresque. A compulsive questioner, a kvetcher, a fundamentally contrapuntal force—that is what he is. His violin is his secret weapon.

Metaphysical Mischief

Mrs. Mojtabai, who is described on the dust jacket of "The 400 Eels of Sigmund Freud" as a teacher of philosophy and a librarian, concerns herself, like that other philosopher-novelist Iris Murdoch, with metaphysical mischief. On one page, she tells us that Jerome, a teen-ager, thinks of his parents as so pathetically young and innocent. Like all recent generations, his too imagines itself reversing roles and fathering his parents. A few pages later, Naomi, another student, receives her first kiss: Her friend Joel forces his tongue, "a grainy, muscular, fibrillating heap," into her mouth. During her second kiss, "his tongues crossed. She explored the subtle facets of his upper palate." Naomi's technical orientation is a parody of today's textbook innocence.

Love and science: Are they contrapuntal or discordant? Is disorder incidental to creation? What moved Freud to give up the eels for us? Is science just so much music to our ears? It is not Mrs. Mojtabai's job to answer these questions, but to raise them. A beautiful question, you might say, is worth a thousand answers.

The author's first novel, "Mundome," was very highly praised, perhaps extravagantly. Even this one has its small imperfections, but nobody is likely to care. It's good enough. As Mrs. Mojtabai says, in what might be an aside on the art of fiction: Does anyone appreciate how difficult it is to dissect an eel?

A psychiatrist's-eye-view of the war game we call football

THE NIGHTMARE SEASON is a harrowing, inside account, told not by an athlete or sportswriter, but by Dr. Arnold J. Mandell, the nation's first "football psychiatrist," who spent nearly two years living and working with the San Diego Chargers, until drug scandals brought about his banishment from the NFL. It is a story of high drama that goes beyond sports to tell us a great deal not only about what makes football men go—but about what makes us all go.

"The most entertaining and the most troubling book written about American sports in a long while. There are lots of terrific stories about the game, the players, the drugs, the orgies, the pressures and the psychological battles for manhood on and off the field."

—Playboy

"No one who reads it will ever be able to watch, or think about, pro football in the same way again."

—MICHAEL CRICHTON, author of The Great Train Robbery

"Don't look for it on 'The NFL Today.' It asks the question did football go from pep talks to pep pills in a generation? From Rockne to ruin?"

—JIM MURRAY, Los Angeles Times

"One of the best and truest books ever written about pro football. Mandell has the soul of a poet and the sharp eye of a novelist."

—JACK MURPHY, San Diego Union

House Panel Bars Stamps For Use in Fast-Food Stores

WASHINGTON, May 19 (UPI)—The House Agriculture Committee overwhelmingly rejected today a proposal to allow use of Government food stamps in hamburger, chicken and other fast-food carryout stores. Representative David R. Bowen, Democrat of Mississippi, offered the plan as the committee continued early stages of drafting an overhaul of the Federal food stamp law. Mr. Bowen said that use of stamps for carryout food should be permitted, because the Agriculture Department had allowed low-income shoppers to use the stamps in carryout departments in some grocery supermarkets.

The committee rejected the plan, 22 to 1, after its chairman, Thomas S. Foley, Democrat of Washington, asserted that it would create "great enforcement problems."

The agriculture panel also rejected two efforts to tighten the stamp program. Life in Bukhara Normal MOSCOW, May 19 (Reuters)—Life in the ancient Uzbek city of Bukhara has returned to normal after a powerful earthquake that hit Soviet Central Asia on Monday, Soviet television said today.

City Productivity...

The limitations imposed by the Emergency Financial Control Board on the transit pay agreement represent a turn toward good sense in municipal labor policy. That is also true of the guidelines the board has laid down for the negotiations just getting under way in police, fire, sanitation and other city agencies.

The principle has now been established that employees of this near-bankrupt metropolis will have to earn any improvement in their pay by savings that result from genuinely increased efficiency (productivity gains), not from cuts in service to the community.

The ban on general wage increases is reinforced by an audit procedure designed to prohibit end runs of the kind the Metropolitan Transportation Authority was recently bludgeoned into allowing under threat of a strike. Not only has the liberalized cost-of-living escalator been deflated, but no money is to be paid under it without proof of productivity gains.

The need for heightened productivity has long been clear, to assure that New York remains a livable city despite reductions in force necessitated by its budget crunch. The new policy provides a positive means for achieving that productivity, one that establishes incentives for the workers and gives both them and the general citizenry a share in the proceeds.

The plan also makes a start toward whittling down the terrible burden of pensions, which remains a major long-range threat to metropolitan fiscal stability. It excludes any new cost-of-living payments, earned through productivity, from incorporation into the pension base. It goes further by mandating the M.T.A. to tighten up on the overtime payments and sick-leave abuses which combine to push up both payroll and pension costs.

Acceptance of the revised formula by the Transport Workers Union is a refreshing departure from the confrontation tactics that cowed the M.T.A. into the original pact. The next six weeks will mark a test of the city's resolution in applying the same guidelines to other municipal unions. To the extent that it succeeds—as it must—it will be meeting the exacting standards of fiscal integrity properly set by the Treasury and the Senate Banking Committee as requisites for continued Federal loans.

Improved management at every level of the civil service will be required if the full dividends of improved productivity are to be achieved. But a long step has been taken toward starting the city back uphill through mutual effort by its unionized employees and their supervisors.

If the State Legislature now follows through with long-overdue rationalization of the bloated pension system, New York will be well-launched on labor reforms adequate to the critical need of the fiscal emergency.

...Apartment Accord

Settlement of the apartment employees' strike ends a fortnight of severe inconvenience for hundreds of thousands of tenants in New York's towering residential buildings. The revisions in the wage formula that were recommended last week by Mayor Beame's mediation panel go so far toward meeting landlord objections to the original package that there is little warrant for continued holdout by dissident owners.

Service employees, though incomparably better paid than they were a decade ago, remain low on the metropolitan wage ladder. Their fringe benefits are not in the same league as those for civil service workers. In addition, the proportion of building operating costs attributable to labor has gone down, partly because of staff reductions—with more to follow in the wake of the strike—and partly because fuel costs, taxes, interest and utility rates have shot up astronomically in recent years.

That means the genuine problems of operators of residential buildings, both cooperative and rental, are part of the larger problems of the metropolitan economy. The crazy-quilt of rent-control and stabilization programs needs drastic overhaul as an initial step toward phased decontrol. It is a disgrace that there is not enough political courage in either the State Legislature or the City Council to cope with this problem. Until there is, the toll will remain heavy in building abandonments and unpaid real-estate taxes.

The Bus Stops Here

"Guess Where the Bus Is Going to Stop," long the most annoying no-win game in town, may at last be on the way out. Defying the tradition of keeping would-be passengers speculating, running and cursing, the Transportation Administration has at last installed 161 bus stop and information signs which are a model of clarity. Using basic international bus symbols, the signs show route numbers, destination, hours of operation and, in the case of private express buses, the companies' telephone numbers. In addition, route maps have been posted at selected key points. The program has been subsidized by a grant from the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, with contributions from the Metropolitan Transportation Authority and the Association for a Better New York. Because the new signs are at present limited to Madison and Fifth Avenues and the Avenue of the Americas between 23d and 57th Streets, they are referred to as a "pilot program," with the modest and accurate claim that it "brings a measure of order for bus riders on some of the busiest streets in the world."

If "pilot" program means that the T.A. wants to find out whether it will work, we make bold to predict flatly that it cannot fail. It will pilot people onto the right buses, for a change. No scientific evaluation is needed to justify extension of the "experiment" throughout the city. It is already several decades late. And now for the subways!

It Looks Like Dirty Pool

The manhandling of the campaign finance law drafts on in a pattern that is less defensible with every passing day. Since March 22, candidates in the election primaries have been denied the Federal funds they counted on and are qualified to receive under the law—because first Congress and now President Ford have incessantly delayed doing what legal commitment and moral obligation dictated they should do.

When the Supreme Court ruled that there was a technical flaw in the way the Federal Election Commission had been set up, Congress had only to reconstitute that body, a day's work, in order to restore the commission's authority to disburse the needed funds. Instead—contrary, it must be admitted, to the President's request—it tinkered with the law for six weeks, making a number of changes that could well have waited until after this year's campaign.

Since then it is the President himself who has been stalling. Not wishing to bear the onus of a veto that would so clearly give him the advantage—a President can easily campaign on credit but his rivals cannot—he has been giving an example of broken field running worthy of his best days in college football.

He took a week to sign the bill in the first place, although he knew its details in advance and also the shriveled state of his rivals' finances. He took another six days to reappoint five commission members and fill one vacancy. Now he refuses to swear in the five until the sixth is confirmed by the Senate on the ground that Congress would want a politically balanced commission.

The argument is specious. Any action by the agency requires four votes, precluding a purely partisan move. In any case, the only action it would take in its first few days of renewed life would be to hand out the subsidy monies that have accumulated.

Those funds could now make a serious difference in the primaries, as indeed they have done already. Mr. Ford's latest delaying action freezes all Federal campaign money for the five primaries of May 25, makes it all but too late to spend for those of June 1 and will make money available at best for only two weeks before the crucial contests in California, New Jersey and Ohio.

If there is not a deliberate design at work here, then Candidate Gerald Ford is needlessly and foolishly letting the country suspect that there is.

Ford's Hurrah...

No matter how his bid for his party's nomination finally turns out, President Ford will remember May 18 with pleasure, for on that date his fellow-citizens in Michigan gave him a resounding vote of confidence.

The Michigan primary was a wildly scrambled affair with Democrats and independents free to vote in the G.O.P. primary. But Democrats who had previously supported Gov. George C. Wallace and did cross over favored Ronald Reagan by a less preponderant margin than had been expected. More significant was the heavy turnout of independents for Mr. Ford.

Only the future can disclose whether Michigan and Maryland—where the President was also a victor—constituted Mr. Ford's last hurrah. The six primaries to be held next week are in the South and Far West, all of them in states—except Oregon—where Mr. Reagan is the favorite.

This week's victories kept the President's campaign viable, but if he is to prevail at the Republican convention in August, he will have to show in the next three weeks that he can win in primaries where home-state pride is not a factor.

...Brown's Debut

Gov. Edmund G. (Jerry) Brown Jr. achieved an impressive victory in Maryland in his debut as a Democratic Presidential candidate. By defeating former Gov. Jimmy Carter by a margin of 49 percent to 37 percent, he established himself as a star performer against the strongest competition in this year's primaries.

But there are disturbing aspects of his victory. Mr. Brown has readily accepted support of the unsavory Maryland Democratic organization headed by Gov. Marvin Mandel, who is hardly the idealistic reformer Governor Brown might be expected to ally himself with. His success in some parts of the state was more a triumph for the old bossism than for the new politics.

Although attacking his opponent for fuzziness on the issues, Governor Brown himself was hardly a model of clarity. Unlike Representative Morris K. Udall, who held Mr. Carter to a virtual standoff in the Michigan primary with an issue-oriented campaign, Mr. Brown contented himself with sloganeering, enigmatic generalities and criticism. Aside from demonstrating his virtuosity as a campaigner, he proved nothing in Maryland about his fitness to be President.

Governor Carter's loss in Maryland and almost invisible margin of victory in Michigan showed that the risks of running in virtually every primary are beginning to catch up with him. Trying to wage a nationwide campaign, he was tripped up by Senator Frank Church in Nebraska. Trying to fend off Governor Brown's challenge in Maryland, he had to forgo campaigning in Michigan and very nearly lost a state where he had expected to score a solid victory.

Mr. Carter remains far ahead in pledged delegates; but his nomination cannot be regarded as certain unless he can decisively defeat at least one of his three pesky challengers—Senator Church, Governor Brown and Representative Udall—in the remaining primaries. Knowing that one or another is lying in ambush for him at almost every turn, he has to devise an effective counter-ambush strategy.

Justice: The 'Elitist and Undemocratic' Plan

To the Editor:
Your "Blueprint for Justice" editorial (May 17) is certainly a call to quick action. In substance, the entire package "without quibbling or separation of parts" should be approved by the Legislature within "the next few weeks." Hardly enough time for meaningful discussion and extended debate, and certainly not for public hearings.

Let's face it—parts of the package are good. Other parts seem to have merit and should be separated and considered individually. But the proposed change in the judicial structure to permit the Governor to appoint every judge in the state is highly controversial, dangerously undemocratic and almost totally lacking in popular support. The most recent reliable poll by Decision Research Corporation indicates that 70 percent of city residents and 84 percent of state residents favor retention of the elective system and that less than 4 percent have no opinion. This clearly stated public preference for an elected judiciary cuts across all geographic, religious, age, racial, sex and economic lines and should tell us something if we would only listen.

Despite all the pious protestations to the contrary, the proposed appointive system is clearly bottomed on three false premises:

(1) That appointment guarantees both incorruptibility and total competency. Not one shred of evidence exists to support this utterly impossible dream. There will be some misfits on any bench, elected or appointed, so let's concentrate on getting rid of them. On that there is complete agreement.

(2) That the present judiciary is corrupt and/or incompetent—a demonstrably damnable lie.

(3) That the people are not qualified to choose their own judges.

Hence, it is proposed that their judges shall be appointed for them by the wise, the virtuous and the well-born—in this instance a small, carefully selected, nonresponsive group of civic and business leaders led, directed and dominated by the prestigious bar associations. No one can dominate like a lawyer. I know—for forty years I have been one.

History tells us that it is always the tyrant who says that the people cannot be trusted. Melvin Block, the noted trial lawyer, comments that tyranny of this kind of intellectual arrogance has no labels and can be found in both major political parties. It lurks under liberal and conservative banners and oft-times moves in the best circles, but one thing is clear: it is always elitist and totally undemocratic. So, too, is the appointment of judges.

The coming national election is probably the first in which contenders for the Presidency are competing in terms of a foreign policy based either on the extent of the destruction United States forces can inflict on the U.S.S.R. or on future prospects in the Panama Canal Zone. To Curb Israeli Hawks

To the Editor:

Your May 11 editorial "Israel's Dilemma" sounds an appropriate warning about a possible U.S.-Israeli confrontation over Jerusalem's settlement policy in the occupied territories.

As you point out, Israel's Government acts within exceedingly tight constraints of a fragile coalition, part of which is determined to appease illegal settlers and to press for more settlements. Moderates in the mainstream of Israeli political life and in the Government, as well as responsible leadership of the American Jewish community, however, find it difficult to work effectively against the hard-nosed elements because they have too little to work with.

As the moderates make their arguments for a reasonable approach, the hawks ask what is in it for Israel if it compromises or halts the existing policy. They point to a series of U.S. Government actions that indicate a weakening of support for Israel, such as the rising arms sales to Arab countries, the reneging of the Ford Administration on a Kissinger commitment for supplementary aid during the fiscal year gap and, most recently, the President's veto of the current year's military aid bill on which Israel has relied for continuing and sustained support.

The Words of Arafat

To the Editor:

In commenting on my April 24 Op-Ed article, Herbert Jaffe questioned if I can mention prominent Arabs who spoke of justice for Jews (letter May 5).

May I refer him to Yasser Arafat's United Nations speech (Nov. 13, 1974), in which he said: "For we deplore all those crimes committed against the Jews; we also deplore all the real discrimination suffered by them because of their faith," and also said, "If the immigration of Jews to Palestine had had as its objective the goal of enabling them to live side by side with us, enjoying the same rights and assuming the same duties, we would have opened our doors to them, as far as our homeland's capacity for absorption permitted." He also stressed, "When we speak of our common hopes for the Palestine of tomorrow we include in our perspective all Jews now living in Palestine who choose to live with us there in peace and without discrimination."

It is a fact that, during the civil war in Lebanon, Yasser Arafat ordered the P.L.O. men to provide protection, food and water to the isolated Lebanese Jewish community. Every responsible Palestinian and Arab seeks human dignity for not only Jews but all people in the Middle East.

Statutory Recognition of Brain Death

accepted practice of pronouncing death on the basis of neurologic criteria gives rise to a potential dilemma. Should doctors pronounce death based on total irreversible loss of brain function when such pronouncements may be disputed in a judicial proceeding on the basis of the common-law definition that death occurs only when spontaneous respiration and heartbeat cease? Without statutory or case-law recognition of brain death, it is possible that a valid medical declaration of death could be considered illegal and lead to criminal or civil liability on the part of a physician or hospital. This possibility has been tested in judicial actions in several locales and has led to passage of brain-death statutes in eleven other States.

prevent repeated anguish-producing court cases. Such a law would allow a physician to terminate artificial respiratory support for a patient who is clearly dead by accepted and validated criteria and would obviate the possibility that the physician, other health professionals, next of kin, guardians and institutions could be held criminally or civilly liable for actions consistent with standards of current medical practice. An additional advantage of having a statutory definition of death is that it would help to guarantee that the highest standards of medical science would be used to make this determination.

brain death has gained widespread support from prestigious representatives of the Roman Catholic, Jewish and Protestant faiths as well as from the organizations representing the legal profession and the medical profession in New York State. It is clear that passage of such timely legislation is urgently needed to modernize the law in keeping with current advances in medical technology and practice and to make certain that the diagnosis of death will be made with the greatest possible care.

Conventional Foolishness

his dishonesty: "A little vagueness goes a long way in this business," he says. A great attitude for an observer, but not for a participant. Some other Democrats run to become known for a campaign years hence, as Senator Church does; or to earn a plate on the ticket, as Congressman Udall does; or simply to get away from the drudgery of running a large state, as Governor Brown does. Meanwhile the only serious candidate in the field moves inexorably ahead. General discontent with Jimmy Carter will grow as his Nixon-esque qualities become more apparent, but only an all-out Ted Kennedy campaign could stop him now.

The Republican race, in contrast, bids fair to be neck-and-neck into the home stretch. On my tally sheet, both candidates come into Kansas City with over a thousand delegates each, and 1,130 the magic number. Switching sports metaphors, more hardball is being played on the Republican side than meets the eye. In Michigan, despite a pretense of campaigning lightly in his opponent's home territory, Governor Reagan's men tried hard to turn out the Wallace vote. In direct-mail advertising, gun control was their issue: "This will be the best opportunity you'll have this year to send our message to the Washington politicians who want to take away our guns."

The Boston Schools

By Anthony Lewis

BOSTON, May 19—There is no use pretending that school busing in Boston will work out just fine if things are allowed to go on as they are. Anyone with eyes to see in this city knows how tense it is. The controversy has worrying implications for race relations, public education and the role of the Federal courts—and not in Boston alone.

The situation rightly concerns the Attorney General, Edward H. Levi. He plainly considers it his duty to try to help find a way out of a legal and political tangle with such troubling national implications.

But the proposition that Mr. Levi has before him—asking the Supreme Court to review the Boston case—looks from this local vantage point like the wrong move, in the wrong place, at the wrong time. Not only wrong but dangerous: dangerous to the interests of law that above all concern the Attorney General.

Boston has had the busing program for two years now, and the case had been in the courts for a long time before that. In all those years the United States Department of Justice never objected to the decisions of the Federal judge in charge, W. Arthur Garrity, or sought review in the Supreme Court. Now suddenly it would. Why?

"Violence pays." That would be the explanation believed by the anti-busing forces here. "When we were polite and legal," people would say to themselves, "nobody listened to us. But when things got ugly, then they had to pay attention."

Lawyers in Washington may find it hard to believe that so crude a lesson might be drawn. They would not, if they understood the situation in Boston. One may think, as I do, that many people are opposed to busing for honest and deeply felt reasons. But the anti-busing campaign has come to what can only be called thug-gery.

On April 5 a group of white high school students recited the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag in the Boston City Council chamber. Then they walked out of City Hall and beat up a black man who just happened to be standing there. They actually assaulted him with the staff of the flag they had just saluted.

Two days later James Kelly of the South Boston Information Center, a main anti-busing group, said: "If I was 13 years old, I'd do the same thing."

The violence is not on one side only. Two weeks after the City Hall episode, a gang of black youths beat a white man nearly to death. But there has been no suggestion from black leaders that they condone such behavior. In any event, at this point the danger of organized resistance to law seems to lie largely on the anti-busing side.

A Justice Department approach to the Supreme Court now would involve a broader risk than encouraging a belief that violence pays. In the opinion of some who are working to prevent an explosion in Boston, it is desperately important to have the basic law of this case settled—and have people accept that it is settled. To bring the Supreme Court in at this stage would have the opposite effect.

Local political realities are important in this regard. The old School Committee that deliberately segregated the school system is no longer in office. City voters elected a majority of members who are broadly ready to proceed with steps toward desegregation. But if it looks as though the basic law of the case may be re-examined, those School Committee members are hardly likely to do anything.

If the Supreme Court were to grant review, it could not hear the case before next fall—or decide it, in all likelihood, before the winter. That would just about assure Boston another school year of uncertainty, turmoil and violence.

Not that Judge Garrity's record in the Boston school case has been perfect. To the contrary, I believe that there is much to criticize in what he has done. But the question is where the fault lies—and where to seek correction.

Judge Garrity's original finding of deliberate manipulation to separate the races in Boston's schools has not been seriously challenged. Some busing was almost certainly unavoidable as a remedy. Doubts arise about the particulars of court-ordered busing and, especially, about the way Judge Garrity has involved himself in the details of school administration—matters that I hope to discuss in a future column.

But the difficult issues are precisely the kind that can only be understood in the light of local conditions. They cry out for reconsideration by Judge Garrity or another district judge, and by the Court of Appeals for this circuit. The Supreme Court is not in a good position to sort out sensitive local problems, and asking it to rethink the Boston case unnecessarily arouses concern about some general reversal of its race relations decisions. It is on the ground in Boston that the Justice Department should offer its advice and its courage.

Toward a healthier economic climate 6.

Government—the big growth industry

One reason for the United States' inadequate economic growth is the large proportion of the country's resources diverted to government rather than into the private capital investment that creates jobs.

Big government, not big business, is this country's problem. Government is where the growth is. Growth of debt and growth of payroll.

Government spending at all levels now accounts for well over a third of our Gross National Product—the value of all the goods and services produced in our country. In 1950 the proportion was a fourth.

This Bicentennial year is an appropriate time to recall that 185 of our country's first 200 years elapsed before the budget of the federal government reached $100 billion, in 1962. Thereafter only nine years elapsed before the federal budget reached $200 billion, in 1971, and only four additional years before it climbed to $300 billion. Now the only question seems to be how greatly it will exceed $400 billion in fiscal 1977. Just paying the interest on this debt—not to mention state and local debt across the country—could eventually swamp us.

Government is also the largest employer in the country, with close to 15 million people on its payroll—about two-and-a-half times as many as in 1950. Total U.S. employment grew far less rapidly in this period. Nearly one out of every five people employed works for government today. Most government revenues are, of course, raised by taxes, and in the last analysis, all taxes are paid by individuals.

Columnist Sylvia Porter says the Tax Foundation calculates that federal, state, and local taxes soak up every cent the average American makes in four months of each year. Taxes of one sort or another, the foundation says, are the biggest single item in the family budget.

Freedom is indivisible

If any one of our free institutions is destroyed—whether economic freedom or academic freedom or political freedom or whatever—all our other freedoms will be endangered. Before destroying economic freedom—under the guise of saving it, of course—we should assess the alternatives. Recent history bears brutal witness to what they are.

We believe pollution of the economic environment is as indefensible as pollution of the physical environment. The United States should now be creating the optimal business climate for 1980 and 1990 and beyond, not working off the understandable frustrations of the past by looking only backward. The need is urgent, because if our society is to survive, we as a people must advance beyond simplistic sloganeering and knee-jerk reactions.

Private business serves the mass market, of course, trying to give the people as a whole what they want or need. Oddly enough, at the present juncture of history this puts business in the role of the great democratizer, in contrast to elitists who tend to want to decide unilaterally what is good for the people. Much of the additional power the elitists want to put into the hands of government seems designed to compel people to act differently from the way they would act of their own volition. It seems to us the people have begun to perceive this danger.

The proper role of government

We are convinced that government should not try to perform economic functions that the marketplace performs more efficiently and more equitably. In our view, the proper and most productive role of government lies in the sphere of the political, in the best sense of that word—not in reaching for more power, but in balancing off various national needs, formulating policies, setting objectives, establishing appropriate incentives to the private sector to achieve those objectives, monitoring progress toward objectives, and, perhaps most important, providing leadership.

Only leadership that is more concerned with the national interest than with narrow partisan interest can set forth national goals, work out compromises between conflicting interests and viewpoints, and win the necessary public support.

It strikes us that charting such a course could occupy the best hearts and minds in American public life for as far ahead as anyone can see. It could be an ennobling pursuit to which to dedicate this country 200 years after the Founding.

Right, Mr. Burnett.

Seldom has anyone so dramatically demonstrated the value of high aspirations as Leo Burnett.

He created more than an enterprise. He gave birth to a philosophy, a school, a viewpoint of advertising.

The early departure of Dr. and Mrs. William J. Ronan from a luncheon for Queen Margarethe II and Prince Henry of Denmark on Monday was not an act of lese-majesté, as reported by a guest quoted in early editions of The Times yesterday. C. Studies Feasibility Convention-Center Aid

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

Proposed seven years ago. No one was rating the chances of this latest bid, but officials were emphasizing that it would provide both psychological and economic daylight in the current fiscal plight.

Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation, said legal experts were studying state law "to see what our parameters are," but he would not elaborate.

Since the M.A.C. is unable now to find new lenders in the credit market for New York City, the question of how to raise money would seem to focus on the possibility of restructuring the terms of existing M.A.C. obligations for longer durations, so that needed funds could be realized by saving immediate debt-service costs. But Mr. Rohatyn refused to discuss this and stressed that the idea was only in a "preliminary review" stage.

The theory behind this approach is that banks and unions might agree to such debt restructuring because they would be among the beneficiaries of a new convention center.

Range of Beneficiaries

One city official said this latest attempt to get the center built was based on identifying ways in which "those parties who might benefit the most from the project might take part in financing it."

This seems to take in a broad range of possibilities, from the depressed construction union to service businesses alarmed at erosion on the West Side. No other details were offered.

Mr. Rohatyn has been emphasizing that the convention center is the single most important project the city could undertake in its present fiscal difficulties. Mayor Beame and other proponents estimate the project would result in 5,000 construction jobs over four years, perhaps 25,000 new permanent jobs, $800 million a year in new business and $32 million a year in tax revenues.

Originally the center was to be built along the Hudson River between 43d and 47th Streets and to include a 13-acre exhibition space, said to be the largest in the world. But with the emergence of the fiscal crisis last year, the city had to withdraw its backing, despite the spending or commitment of $13 million of the $231 million estimated cost, and despite some initial construction steps.

Last December, as the city searched for new financing, the developers of Battery Park City, the lagging housing project in lower Manhattan, proposed making room for the center, at a cost of $180 million, on their landfill site near the Port Authority's World Trade Center.

City officials were enthusiastic, but then the developer Donald C. Trump came forward with the proposal to build the center for $125 million on the Penn Center yards at West 34th Street, closer to the midtown theater and hotel districts.

The original plan was unveiled when the city still had its capital-raising powers and when the Mayor—John V. Lindsay—presented the project as a glowing new waterfront jewel for the Bicentennial. It soon became involved in controversy as Clinton-area residents opposed it or sought assurances on such points as traffic and pollution. As many of these points were finally being settled last year, the city's budget and borrowing powers collapsed.

Proponents feel that if the financing can be pieced together, local objections will have far less weight in the face of the promise of badly needed new jobs.

Teamster Organizer Is Slain in Queens

By LESLIE MAITLAND

A teamster organizer was killed, two men were shot and another was beaten with baseball bats and chains in a battle yesterday between two unions outside a metal fabricating plant in Woodside, Queens.

The dead man was Devereaux Maguire of Local 810 of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. He had reportedly brought his men to work at the factory—Samson Industries—earlier this week, but was turned away by picketing employees who are members of Local 455 of the International Association of Bridge, Structural and Ornamental Ironworkers. They have been on strike since last July.

They were picketing yesterday at the factory, at 62-35 30th Avenue, when several carloads of teamster members arrived around 8:30 A.M., the police said. It was not clear who started the fighting, but they said a holster was found on Mr. Maguire's body. No guns were recovered, but bats and chains were found at the scene.

Mr. Maguire, who was 46 years old and lived in Huntington, L.I., was found with a bullet hole in his back at the Brook-Queens Expressway, about a block from the factory.

According to conflicting reports cited by the police, he either staggered there from the factory or was chased there and shot with his own gun, after having fired at the picketers. One of the pickets, Fernando Anon, 43, was shot in the back of the neck. The bullet shattered his spinal cord and lodged in his brain, the police said, and he is in critical condition at Elmhurst Hospital. Another picket, Timothy Gardner, 23, received a flesh wound and was treated and released.

Randall Martin, 36, said to have been on the teamster group was beaten on the head. He was taken to Astoria General Hospital, where he was listed as in fair condition. In the fighting, one car was set afire and the windows of another were smashed.

At the two-story brick factory building yesterday, windows were broken, a tree branch blocked the entrance, and black paint had been sprayed on the walls to read "No Scabs."

In the morning, before the fatal clash, someone had hung on the building a dead cat with a cigar stuffed in its mouth, with a label reading "Dave McGuire and his scabs." Beneath the cat a sign scrawled on the wall said, "Life is not

Senator Dodd's decision not to vote for the tax caught both Mr. Feldman and Mr. Merlino by surprise. Senator Merlino said later that Mr. Dodd's position was "a political ploy to promote himself for Governor."

Mr. Dodd did not speak during the debate.

Another Senator, Joseph W. Tumulty, a Jersey City Democrat who had supported the income tax last year, also voted against it this time.

Two Republican senators, however, voted for the tax tonight after opposing it in the past. They were Raymond H. Bateman of Somerville and Wayne Dumont Jr. of Phillipsburg.

Fourteen Democrats voted for the bill and 14 voted against it.

One Democrat—Senator Messers—did not vote. Eight of the 10 Republican senators voted against the tax, as did the lone Independent in the body, Anthony Imperiale of Newark.

Before taking up the income tax—which would have imposed a levy of 2 to 4 percent on the gross income of the state's three million wage earners—the Senate founded for hours in a sea of motions over a bill to set minimum standards that New Jersey's 1,450,000 pupils would have to meet to advance from grade to grade.

Passage of this minimum standards bill was one price that Republican assemblymen had demanded for any G.O.P. support of the income tax in the Assembly. Five Republicans

White Plains to Get Traffic Computer

The city of White Plains is planning to pay $1.2 million toward a $4 million computerized traffic-control system for its central business district.

The plans were disclosed last night as part of the first of four yearly hearings sponsored by the Westchester County Board of Transportation.

"There will be traffic sensors in every street that will allow adjustment according to traffic speed and flow," he said. "The system adjusts to changes in direction and even speed-ups due to changing weather conditions. It's all coordinated in a central computer system that requires no monitoring."

Westchester County now has a similar system operating along Westchester Avenue on the White Plains-Garrison border, where a heavy concentration of corporate offices produces an uneven traffic flow.

New York City has similar systems on Queens Boulevard and Astoria Boulevard and Northern Boulevard in Queens. The traffic information is sorted out at a computer center in Long Island City.

In addition to the White Plains project, Westchester plans to purchase 80 new buses this year to purchase 80 new buses and to make other improvements to the county bus system.

The county will spend smaller amounts for several minor road-improvement projects.

Another major road project scheduled to be undertaken in the next two years is the "missing link" of the Sprain Brook Parkway between the Cross-Westchester Expressway and Hawthorne Circle.

State Transportation Commissioner Raymond T. Schuler announced last night that bids for the Sprain Brook project would be taken in late 1977 and construction should begin in 1978.

While the Senate was stalling for time late this afternoon by debating the minimum standards bill, Senator Merlino prodded the Senate chamber looking for votes.

When the three-hour debate began after a 45-minute recess for a last-minute conference, Senator Merlino made a perfunctory pitch for the tax and the settled warily in his chair in the Senate front row.

Last week the Supreme Court said it would no longer tolerate the failure of the Legislature to implement the Public Education Act of 1975.

"Thorough Education Decried" That law defined the goals of public education in New Jersey, and the court ruled in January that it met the requirements of the State Constitution that all children from 5 years to 18 years are entitled to a "thorough and efficient education."

3 Arrested for Breaking Into Bond's

Three men were arrested for allegedly trying to steal $2,000 from a Bond's clothing store at 1530 Broadway, near 45th Street. A police spokesman said the men broke into the store from a window near the roof of the three-story building. After forcing open a safe on the top floor, the suspects tried to break open a ground-floor safe, but tripped an alarm that brought the police and private guards. A two-hour search that ended at 4:30 A.M. led to the suspects, who were found hiding in a crawlspace between the top-floor ceiling and the roof. The suspects were identified only as Edward Rodriguez, 23 years old, his brother, Emil, 18, and Edgar Ramos, 21.

Suspect Seized in Assaults on Elderly

A 20-year-old unemployed Brooklyn man was arrested and accused of being part of a two-man robbery-assault team that had terrorized elderly people in Coops Island housing developments. The suspect, Rodney Steeps of 2970 West 27th Street, who is out on bail in an earlier robbery-assault case, was seized as he left his home. His alleged accomplice, Henry Brown, 23, of 2960 West 24th Street, is being sought. The two allegedly beat and robbed 15 elderly persons after gaining access to their apartments by pretending to be collectors for Brooklyn youth organizations.

$20 Million Suit Planned in Car Death

The executor of the estate of James L. Rochelle of Warren, N.J., one of four persons killed Feb. 23 when a car driven by a 75-year-old man sped out of control near the Plaza Hotel, has started court action preparatory to a $20 million damage suit. Aaron Broder, lawyer for the executor, Carl R. Fenstermaker, filed a petition in Surrogate Court, Manhattan, for letters of administration that would enable Mr. Fenstermaker to begin the suit. The rented car was driven by Philip Coher of 70 East 10th Street. He has pleaded not guilty to a charge of criminal negligence.

Hiring Discrimination Halted

ABS Worldwide Technical Services of 45 Broad Street has reached an agreement with the State Division of Human Rights to stop discriminating against Jews and women in its hiring practices. The agreement was made public by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, which represented two Jewish engineers, a man and a woman, who had applied unsuccessfully to the company for engineering posts in Arab countries.

Mayor John Carey of Rye showing his skateboard technique last night in the City Hall parking lot

Rye Mayor Takes a Stand Over a Slippery Question

Special to The New York Times

RYE, N.Y., May 19—Mayor Hagele said. So far, he added, John Carey zig-zagged down the City Hall parking lot to night on a red plastic skateboard.

In three out of four tries, he stayed on his feet and leaped neatly off at the end of his run. But even when the board slipped and he flew into the air and landed on his gray gabardine backside, he was wildly cheered by a large crowd of young boys and girls, some carrying skateboards under their arms.

His performance was a prelude to a meeting of the City Council, which had included the skateboarding question on its agenda.

The major opponent of the sport, Police Chief Charles McLaughlin, did not attend. He was on vacation, and his stand-in, Lieut. William Hagele, had said earlier in the day that he had other plans for the evening.

Lieutenant Hagele said that about a month ago, stirred into action by a recent skateboard craze in the suburbs, Chief McLaughlin ordered his policemen to warn anyone seen skateboarding in the city that it was a violation of an ordinance.

If the culprit is caught a second time, his board will be confiscated, Lieutenant

The ordinance, said Mayor Carey, forbids activity—such as coasting, ball-playing and roller-skating—that interferes with the "free, safe and convenient use" of a street.

At tonight's meeting, about 25 young people, ranging in age from 5 to 18, offered suggestions for safe skateboarding, such as special streets, warning signs and licensing. One boy said he had saved $40 to buy a board, and had had "only one hour of fun" before it was banned.

If skateboards must be prohibited because they are dangerous, said a 10-year-old, "why not out on bicycles and trains and planes and things?"

The council members, who were concerned with issues such as noise, freedom and the city's liability for injuries, discussed the issue for about an hour.

Finally, the Mayor moved that the absolute ban not be supported, but that the Chief of Police and the Superintendent of Recreation try to plan a program of supervised skateboarding. The motion was approved.

JERSEY HOSPITAL HAILS INDICTMENT

Director Views Case Against Surgeon as Vindication of Medical Profession

By FRANK J. PRIAL
Special to The New York Times

ORADELL, N.J., May 19—The executive director of Riverdell Hospital here, where Dr. Mario E. Jascavelevich allegedly murdered five patients while serving as chief of surgery 10 years ago, hailed the physician's indictment on murder charges as a vindication for the hospital and for the medical profession.

"The people of the community should be extremely proud of the fact that it was the board of directors of this hospital that first brought this problem to the authorities," said the director, Sebastian L. Suriani.

Mr. Suriani, who has been at Riverdell only two years, said the fact that the case had languished for a decade was not the fault of the hospital, but of the prosecutors. "If the legal profession didn't do anything, there was nothing we could do in the medical profession," he said.

"The medical community doesn't hide things under the rug," Mr. Suriani said. "We tell it like it is. There has been a decided lack of confidence in the medical community of late. I hope this will serve to restore some of that confidence."

The hospital director disclosed that Riverdell had referred to the disclosures of Dr. Jascavelevich's alleged activities there. "We had a rough three months," he said, "beginning in January, when these stories first came out, but everything is pretty much back to normal now."

Mr. Suriani said that Riverdell's occupancy rate yesterday was 90.1 percent. The one-story, brick building, located at 576 Kinderkamack Road, has 81 beds.

Dr. Jascavelevich's practice suffered none of the downturn that hit the hospital in the wake of the first disclosures of the alleged murders. "The people still line up on this porch during office hours," said Donald Leschnik, manager of surgical supply store across the street from Dr. Jascavelevich's office at 435 60th Street in West New York.

"I'd have to say his practice is still as heavy as ever," Mr. Leschnik said. "We still fill a lot of prescriptions for him."

Doorbell Unanswered
No one answered the doorbell at the doctor's office yesterday, but several neighbors spoke of him.

"He was a very good man, very good to his patients," said Marie Myer, a dental assistant who works in a building next door. Mrs. Myer said she talked to Dr. Jascavelevich last week. "He told me he was sure he would be vindicated," she said.

Dr. Joseph Timmes, director of surgery at Jersey City Medical Center, where Dr. Jascavelevich has been an attending staff surgeon for many years, said, in the wake of the indictment.

"He will continue on the staff as long as his license is not revoked. And he will continue to operate, of course. Unless the board of managers of the Jersey City Medical Center tells me differently."

"To us, he's just another guy. He's a good technical surgeon. Dr. Timmes said his personal reaction to the charges in the indictment was incredulous.

"I can't believe it," he said. "I can't imagine this fellow doing anything like this."

At Christ Hospital in Jersey City, where Dr. Jascavelevich has been an attending surgeon since 1960, a spokesman expressed surprise at the charges in the indictment, but said no immediate steps against the physician had been planned. The hospital had attempted to revoke his privileges there soon after the allegations involving Dr. Jascavelevich were disclosed in January. That attempt was stopped in court and the hospital continued his privileges.

Dr. Jascavelevich, his wife, and two children, one of whom was adopted in South America, live in a split-level home at 10 Priscilla Lane in a relatively new section of Englewood Cliffs. Yesterday, shades were drawn at the home and, although a window, no one answered the doorbell.

A woman who answered the door at 14 Priscilla Lane declined to discuss her neighbors other than to note that Dr. Jascavelevich had "only been indicted."

"He will have his day in court," she added.

Soviet Denies Its Spending For Defense Is Increasing

MOSCOW, May 19 (Reuters)—The official Tass press agency today dismissed Western allegations of growing Soviet military spending as propaganda intended to insure higher defense budgets in certain North Atlantic Treaty countries.

A Tass commentary said the allegations were being deliberately circulated just before the alliance's foreign ministers' meeting, which opens in Oslo tomorrow.

"It is evident that the lies about the growing Soviet menace are used as a propaganda screen for hiking military spending in some of the NATO countries most strenuously on the eve of the NATO Council session," Tass said.

Suspicious About Doctor Brought Curare Inquiry

By FRED FERRETTI

Ten years ago, in the fall of 1966, a worried young doctor just out of medical school peered into a locker in a room of Riverdell Hospital, a small osteopathic center in Oradell, N.J., where he had recently begun practicing, and saw 18 empty vials.

The labels on them read "Tubocurarine" and "Tubarine," both brand names for purified curare.

The young doctor, Stanley Harris, had been suspicious of an older colleague, the man whose elongings were in the locker, because several of the younger man's patients had died suddenly of respiratory arrest and paralysis of the respiratory muscles—conditions consistent with those induced by injections of curare—after they were treated by the older doctor.

The young doctor's suspicions and subsequent discovery generated an investigation by the Bergen County prosecutor's office into 13 questionable deaths in the small hospital. But the investigation faltered and lay dormant until last January, when The New York Times reported the findings of its inquiry into the deaths and the practices of the older doctor.

It Was 'Dr. X'
He was referred to only as "Dr. X," until the morning of March 17, when The Times, citing court records, identified him as Dr. Mario Jascavelevich, the former chief surgeon at Riverdell. Yesterday, Dr. Jascavelevich, a 48-year-old Argentine immigrant, was indicted for five alleged murders at Riverdell after a labyrinthine investigation that included exhumations of bodies, sophisticated testing of dead and decomposed body tissue for traces of injected curare, the grinding up of vital organs for testing with curare-detecting dyes, and such mundane investigative techniques as fingerprinting, the taking of dental impressions and X-rays.

The first inquiry into Dr. Jascavelevich's actions at Riverdell began when the hospital's board of directors, after listening to Dr. Harris, asked Guy W. Callisi, then the Bergen County Prosecutor, to investigate their chief surgeon, for deaths they considered "unusual or unexplained." Dr. Jascavelevich denied any wrongdoing and protested that he was being "framed," perhaps by other doctors. However, he did say that he had been experimenting with curare on dying dogs.

The investigation turned up the fact that Dr. Jascavelevich had bought—between September 1965 and September 1966—24 10-cubic-centimeter vials of curare from a surgical supply company across the street from his office.

The 1966 investigation bogged down inexplicably, then was dropped in two weeks without any presentation to the sitting Bergen County grand jury. But three months later a toxicologist's report on the tissue of one of those whose death was unexplained, a 36-year-old woman, Elaine Shaw, suggested that curare might be present in the tissue and that "the chemical findings should be considered suspicious without definite positive or negative results."

However, this finding was dropped into the by then inactive file.

File Sent to Warehouse
The file was sent to a Bergen County warehouse, where it lay for almost a decade, until someone who had heard of the case, told The Times of it. The Times' investigation led to the reopening of the case by the current County Prosecutor, Joseph G. Woodcock Jr. Mr. Woodcock was also told by Dr. Michael M. Baden, a leading forensic pathologist, that the "chemical findings" were "not explicable by natural disease processes or stated causes of death" and were consistent with death by a fast-acting drug such as curare.

Very quickly, exhumations, autopsies and reautopsies were ordered by Mr. Woodcock. The first of these was on the body of a 4-year-old Nancy Savino, who died in Riverdell in March 1966.

Investigators next exhumed the body of Margaret Henderson, 26, who died in 1966, and was said initially of hepatitis. Later, it was reported that there was "no clear indication" of the cause of her death.

Next came Frank Biggs, 58, who was listed as having died in August 1966 of a heart attack, and Carl Rohrbek, 73, who died in December 1965 before scheduled hernial surgery. The fifth was Mrs. Arzt.

Medical Detectives
Their body tissues were turned over to teams of medical detectives. Their task was complicated by the fact that, even if curare had been present at the times of death, it might have undergone chemical change, or be undetectable because of embalming fluids or substances in the earth that could interfere with the tests. They were worried they might get false or inconclusive results. They used techniques that were not available a decade ago for the first autopsies.

On March 6, the presence of curare was reported in Nancy Savino's body.

Ten days later, a Bergen County Grand Jury began hearing testimony in the case, even as it was disclosed that curare had been found in still another exhumed body, that of Emma Arzt, a 70-year-old librarian who died in September 1966, as well as in the tissues of Mr. Biggs and Mrs. Henderson.

Mr. Woodcock then said he planned to seek an indictment. Yesterday that indictment was returned with four more, and now "Doctor X" finds himself accused of being a multiple murderer.

'Dr. X' Indicted for Murder in Jersey in 5 Deaths From

have recently emerged, may also be exhumed before Dr. Jascavelevich goes to trial.

"I don't think there is a more serious crime in the history of jurisprudence or in common law," Sybil R. Moses, an assistant Bergen County Prosecutor, said at Dr. Jascavelevich's arraignment at 8:30 A.M. before Judge Theodore W. Trautwein in Superior Court here.

A court official said Dr. Jascavelevich had appeared generally serene during the arraignment, but had raised his eyebrows and had seemed briefly shaken as Mrs. Moses had noted that the indictment charged multiple murders. His plea of "not guilty"—the surgeon had previously denied any responsibility for the deaths—was entered by his attorney, Ray Brown.

The five persons whom Dr. Jascavelevich was accused by the grand jury of murdering were Nancy Savino, 4 years old; Margaret Henderson (also known as Margaret Pearson); 26; Carl Rohrbek, 73; Frank Biggs, and Emma Arzt, 70. With the exception of Mr. Rohrbek, all the patients had been recovering in their rooms from surgery, and had been operated on by colleagues of Dr. Jascavelevich.

Judge Trautwein, rejecting a prosecution request that bail for Dr. Jascavelevich be set at $250,000, established bail of $150,000. According to Mr. Woodcock, Dr. Jascavelevich was to provide $15,000 in cash and the remainder of the bail through a surety bond and pledges of his real estate owned by him.

The surgeon, who emigrated to the United States from Argentina in 1955 and became an American citizen in 1961, was released from custody at 1:55 P.M.

Wearing a tan coat over a gray-blue suit, the slightly built, bespectacled doctor hurried sturdily out a common door in the company of several men, and was immediately driven away in a waiting sedan. His scheduled operations at Jersey City Medical Center were canceled.

Last January Mr. Woodcock asked the New Jersey Board of Medical Examiners to consider whether Dr. Jascavelevich's license to practice should be suspended pending the outcome of the case. Since then, the board has been conducting its own investigation of Dr. Jascavelevich, but it has not decided yet on a course of action.

Board May Act
Anthony LaBue, a Deputy State Attorney General who is counsel to the board, said this afternoon that the board "will take whatever action may be appropriate" regarding Dr. Jascavelevich.

He declined to say when such action, if taken at all, might occur. Normally, it would be an indictment alone that would constitute reason for suspension of a medical license.

Dr. Jascavelevich performs most of his operations at Jersey City Medical Center and at Christ Hospital in Jersey City. Officials at the two hospitals said that the institutions had no plans to suspend or revoke Dr. Jascavelevich's privileges.

Mr. Woodcock, who said at a news conference that the grand jury had heard 23 witnesses in 11 sessions in the last two months, said that he did not expect a case of "this magnitude and complexity to go to trial until late this year at the earliest."

The deaths at Riverdell—a small, osteopathic hospital at which Dr. Jascavelevich was chief surgeon from 1963 to early 1967—were investigated in 1966 by Guy W. Callisi, then the Bergen County Prosecutor, but the investigation was dropped after two weeks, without presentation to a grand jury. The basis for Mr. Callisi's decision to close the matter is still in dispute.

Details regarding the deaths of the five patients named in the new indictment include the following:

CARL ROHRBECK
Of the 13 patients, Mr. Rohrbek was the only one whose death occurred prior to 1966. Mr. Rohrbek entered Riverdell on Dec. 12, 1965, for an elective repair of a ventral hernia, and Dr. Jascavelevich was scheduled to operate on him the following morning. A preoperative examination found no abnormalities in Mr. Rohrbek's heart or chest, according to the hospital chart. But either that evening or the next morning, Dr. Jascavelevich canceled the surgery, stating in a note that he detected "minimal clinical signs of heart failure" that he wanted evaluated.

About 7:30 A.M. on Dec. 13, Dr. Jascavelevich visited Mr. Rohrbek. He then informed Mr. Rohrbek's doctor, Jay Sklar, who was preparing for the operation in the hospital's operating room, that the operation had been canceled.

Dr. Sklar, a director of the hospital, told Mr. Callisi in 1966 that he was mystified by the cancellation because Dr. Jascavelevich had told him only that he had had a "premonition" and did not want to proceed with the operation as a result.

Dr. Sklar said he then went to see Mr. Rohrbek who, he recalled, asked him, "What's holding up the show?" "I listened to his heart, I listened to his lungs, and I took his blood pressure," Dr. Sklar told Mr. Callisi. "Everything was satisfactory to my way of thinking."

Dr. Sklar returned to the dressing room and said to Dr. Jascavelevich, "I just don't understand. This isn't the Dark Ages; you've got to give me a better reason."

At Dr. Sklar's request, Dr. Jascavelevich went back to look at Mr. Rohrbek at 7:45 A.M. and, at that time, started an intravenous feeding tube on the patient, the chart states. Again, Dr. Jascavelevich returned to Dr. Sklar and said he would not operate on Mr. Rohrbek.

"He called for the next case," Dr. Sklar told Mr. Callisi. "I remember very vividly I was just going to say to him 'That's the last patient I'm ever going to see' when the nurse came in and said 'Dr. Sklar, your Mr. Rohrbek just died.'"

Dr. Sklar said he was "flabbergasted" by the sudden death and requested an autopsy by the County Medical Examiner.

On autopsy, Mr. Rohrbek was found to have marked atherosclerosis in his "left main coronary artery" and his death was ascribed to "coronary occlusion."

Dr. Jascavelevich, in his statement in 1966, said his decision to cancel the operation on Mr. Rohrbek was "typical of how you can avoid an operating room death in the operating room." He denied saying he had had a "premonition" regarding the death. "That would carry this into the field of magic," he said.

NANCY SAVINO
The Savino child, who was first thought to have acute appendicitis, was admitted to Riverdell on March 19, 1966, and was operated on that evening by Dr. Stanley Harris, according to the hospital chart. The one-and-a-half-hour operation involved the removal of cysts affecting the small intestine and a small bowel resection. The child's course of recovery on March 20 was considered smooth and uneventful.

From 11 o'clock that night until 7 A.M. on March 21, the child was attended by a private duty nurse. Although the child complained that her "belly didn't feel well" and she cried a little and said she was "homesick for mommy," she slept soundly most of the night, and her vital signs were "all within normal limits." At 7:40 A.M., the chart noted, she was sleeping.

At 8 A.M., a technician came into the child's room to draw blood and was unable to awaken the girl. Records show that an emergency call brought Dr. Jorge Ortega, an intern, and Dr. Jascavelevich, who said he had been in the operating room. Dr. Ortega tried to revive the child with mouth-to-mouth resuscitation while Dr. Jascavelevich checked her with a stethoscope. At 8:15 A.M., she was pronounced dead.

Dr. Jascavelevich, in his 1966 statement to the Prosecutor, speculated that the Savino child might have died of an allergy to any medicine she was receiving, or of an "auto-allergy" to materials and tissue examinations found no abnormalities, or of a heart attack that did not leave an imprint. But an autopsy in 1966 on the girl, who had not been hospitalized previously, failed to establish any cause of death and it was attributed to "undetermined physiological reaction."

MARGARET HENDERSON
Mrs. Henderson was admitted to Riverdell at 5:05 A.M. on April 22, 1966.

Mrs. Henderson had complained of severe abdominal pain, but when she was operated on by Dr. Harris and Dr. Robert Livingston at 6 A.M., against the advice of Dr. Jascavelevich, who, when called for consultation, wanted additional X-rays taken—the surgeons "found nothing," according to the hospital chart.

Mrs. Henderson's postoperative course throughout that day was apparently uneventful, but after a "fairly comfortable night" she was found to be "tense and apprehensive" at 6:30 A.M. on April 23. Around 7:30 A.M., she was given a bath.

Half an hour later, the chart shows, Mrs. Henderson complained of an inability to swallow and pain in the legs and chest, and Dr. Jascavelevich started an intravenous feeding of glucose and water. Whether this was set up before or after the patient's complaints is unclear. At 8:45 A.M., after Mrs. Henderson was found unconscious, she was pronounced dead.

An autopsy in 1966 ascribed Mrs. Henderson's death to degenerated hepatic necrosis—hepatitis extracte. But the pathologist who had done the microscopic examination for the autopsy stated in his separate report that he had "found nothing in Mrs. Henderson's liver or other organs which is clearly indicative of the cause of death."

FRANK BIGGS
Mr. Biggs underwent surgery at Riverdell in late August 1966 for a duodenal ulcer with obstruction. Mr. Biggs's recovery seemed uneventful until the night of Aug. 28. At 8 P.M., a nurse noted on the hospital chart that evening care had been given and that the patient who had been operated on by Dr. Robert Briskin, had no pains, came "very good color," and "breathing."

At 9:15 P.M., Mr. Biggs was found cyanotic (blue) and was having difficulty breathing. Dr. Ortega, the intern, and Dr. Jascavelevich responded to a nurse's call for help, according to the hospital chart. A respiratory stimulant was given, and Mr. Biggs's heart was massaged externally. But he was pronounced dead at 9:30 P.M.

An autopsy in 1966 revealed no anatomic cause of death. Although Mr. Biggs's heart was found to be entirely normal, it was noted that his death might have been caused by an excessively rapid heart beat caused by what was said to be a large amount of urine in his bladder.

EMMA M. ARZT
Mrs. Arzt was operated on for a heart attack by Dr. Harris on Sept. 22, 1966.

10 Rebels and 4 Passers-By Killed in Teheran Clashes
TEHERAN, Iran May 19 (AP)—Ten guerrillas and four passers-by were killed by gunfire yesterday at three hide-outs northwest of Teheran, officials announced today. They said those in the hide-outs had connections "with foreign countries and foreign terrorist groups."

A Government statement said that the passers-by were shot by the guerrillas when they tried to help the police prevent escapes.

The Government has reported seven gun battles in the last week in an intensified police campaign against what it calls terrorism. In one battle, officials reported 11 guerrillas and 4 policemen killed Sunday at what they called Marxist guerrilla hide-outs in the capital.

The Government did not say what foreign countries were involved, but it said that the guerrillas—three women and seven men—used submachine guns, ammunition and grenades from Eastern-bloc countries.

Ford Is Recalling Cars For Gas Pedal Defect
DETROIT, May 19 (UPI)—The Ford Motor company said today that it was recalling nearly one-half million current-model Ford and Lincoln-Mercury cars because quick acceleration might cause the gas pedal to stick.

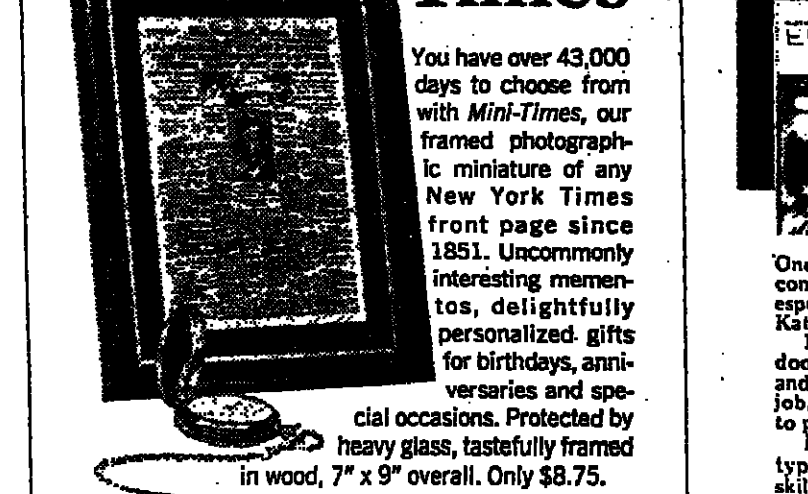

The company said that 28,000 of the 441,700 cars it was recalling were suspected of having a defective accelerator control cable. All must be inspected, however, to discover which are defective.

The company said that there had been nine incidents in which the accelerator stuck in the wide-open position. All vehicles, and no injuries or accidents occurred as a result of the defect, the company said.

If the gas pedal sticks, a Ford spokesman said, the driver should shift the transmission into neutral, apply the brakes and pull out of the side of the road.

U.S. Plan on Lake Rejected

By Vermont and New York
BURLINGTON, Vt., May 19 (AP)—Vermont and New York officials have refused to accept a policy proposal of the Environmental Protection Agency for controlling pollution in Lake Champlain.
Meeting here yesterday, spokesmen for the two states urged representatives of the agency to conduct a study of lake conditions. The study would be used as a basis for establishing a cleanup policy, they said.
The Federal proposal calls for a joint policy that would include a ban on phosphate detergents, removal of phosphorus from discharges of wastewater and elimination of new wastewater discharges that would encourage the growth of algae.
The proposal also recommended a joint Federal-State program to study the rapid aging of the lake and the sources and types of pollution.
After a long discussion, the officials agreed to meet June 3 in Albany to forge a policy.

Rangers' Bednarski Signs for Two Years

The New York Rangers have signed John Bednarski, their 23-year-old defenseman, to a two-year contract.

Feeney had also previously called the Braves owner, Ted Turner, to a meeting today reportedly to discuss Turner's incentive bonus plans to players and coaches.

John Bednarski

"Naturally, I'm pleased, both for the Rangers and for John, to announce this signing," said John Ferguson, the Rangers coach and general manager.

So Schembechler, the 47-year-old University of Michigan football coach, has been readmitted to St. Joseph Mercy Hospital in Ann Arbor and is scheduled to undergo surgery to alleviate a continuing heart problem either today or tomorrow.

Charles Feeney, the National League president, has ordered Manager Dave Bristol and Coach Vern Benson of the Atlanta Braves to appear before him in San Francisco tomorrow to answer charges of bumping an umpire.

The squeeze on athletic budgets caused by New York City's fiscal crisis, has caused another City University athletic figure to resign.

David L. Meister has been appointed director of broadcasting for major league baseball by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

Roy Andruff, leading scorer for the Nova Scotia Voyageurs and second leading scorer in the American Hockey League has been awarded the Les Cunningham trophy as the A.H.L.'s most valuable player for the past season.

Strange Advances In Golf

PINEHURST, N.C., May 19 (UPI) — Curtis Strange, the defending champion, and Fred Ridley, the 1975 United States amateur champion, each won two matches today and advanced to the quarterfinals of the 76th annual North and South amateur golf championship.

Strange, a former National Collegiate Athletic Association champion, will face Kelly Roberts, 1974 Ontario amateur champion from Mississippi, Canada, in the quarterfinals.

Strange, a Wake Forest University junior, beat Garry Bennett of Florence, S.C., 3 and 2, in the morning round today and then downed Stewart Alexander of St. Petersburg, Fla., in the afternoon by the same score.

Matthews Captures L.I. Golf in Miserable Weather

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr. Special to The New York Times WESTHAMPTON BEACH, L.I., May 19—David Matthews, a former University of Arkansas linebacker, could not remember playing football in weather as bad as it was today for the last two rounds of the 52d annual Long Island Golf Association open tournament at the Westhampton Country Club.

But despite his admitted discomfort, Matthews shot an exceptional one-under-par 34, 35-69 in the final round and took the title by five strokes with a 54-hole total of 215.

Most of the golfers agreed that they had never seen worse conditions for a major metropolitan-area tournament. The temperature never reached 40 degrees and the winds were fierce.

Larry Laoretti, the pro at Pine Hollow, opened the day with a strong 72 to take the lead at 144, two strokes in front of Matthews.

Three finished in a tie for the runner-up spot at 220. They were Jim Albus of La Tourette, who shot 78 and 73 today; Farrel Furst of Cedarbrook, who had 80 and 70; and Pete Davison of Middle Bay with 79 and 71.

The victory was worth $1,000 to Matthews, and it was the biggest golf triumph for the 27-year-old assistant pro at Wheatley Hills, who played winning football for Coach Frank Broyles of Arkansas.

Matthews' birdie at the par-4 fourth was the result of a strong five-iron shot from the right rough that put his ball 10 feet from the cup.

Matthews even forgot the weather in his moment of victory and said, "I want to stay up here and make my career here."

although he also had some fine shots from the rough.

Matthews' birdie at the par-4 fourth was the result of a strong five-iron shot from the right rough that put his ball 10 feet from the cup.

He drove into the rough again at the par-5 fifth. Another good five-iron shot followed by a wedge shot gave him an 8-foot putt for the birdie.

Matthews even forgot the weather in his moment of victory and said, "I want to stay up here and make my career here."

The big man, who was born in Little Rock and raised in Fayetteville, said he wanted to remain in the area as a professional "because the best golf courses in the country are here, the best club professionals and you can play a lot of tournament golf, too, while working as a club pro. I have no desire for the four, I have the best of both worlds here and I want to stay."

Matthews, in his first year at Wheatley Hills, won a Westhampton layout that emphasized his point of good courses. Deep in the first round, the heavy rain water in any terrain.

You Gotta Believe That Tug Is Angry

You gotta believe that Tug McGraw was curious. Ever since the New York Mets traded him to the Philadelphia Phillies, he had wondered why. And while the Phillies were awaiting an exhibition game with the New York Yankees...

"They got Del Unser, and he's a good center fielder, but the relief pitcher they got, Mac Scarce, hadn't proved that he could do the job I did. But like I say, if the one man had just told me he thought my arm was gone, I could have accepted that. I could have respected it. I might not have liked it, but I could have accepted it and respected it. But not this way. And believe me, I say this with malice toward none of the players or Mrs. Payson, bless her soul. Just the one man."

This was the consensus of executives interviewed at the annual meeting of the American Insurance Association, one of the principal trade groups of fire and casualty companies. The two-day meeting, held at the Plaza Hotel here, ended yesterday. In addition to seeking rate increases to meet near-term cash needs and long-term profit goals, the insurers are urging that state regulators be stripped of their authority to rule on the merits of rate increase proposals before they are imposed. Furthermore, they intend to seek changes in laws covering damage suits—known as tort laws—and to place limits on the size and scope of most damage awards.

KELLOGG IN PACT TO BUY TROPICANA

By HERBERT KOSHEITZ
The Kellogg Company, the nation's largest manufacturer of ready-to-eat cereals, and Tropicana Products Inc., announced yesterday a tentative agreement to merge. It was the second merger proposal between the companies in two years. The agreement calls for holders of Tropicana's 3,396,358 outstanding shares to receive 1.5 shares of Kellogg stock for each of their shares. At yesterday's closing price of 22 1/2, the value of the 14 million Kellogg shares to be exchanged would come to $317 million.

On April 15, 1974 a proposal was made for a one-for-one share exchange of stock between the two companies but, according to Anthony T. Rossi, chairman of Tropicana, the deal was canceled in a matter of days after the announcement. He said completion of the new agreement was subject to shareholder approval of both companies and they were now working out a complete agreement.

Statement to Be Filed
Tropicana, at Bradenton, Fla., processes citrus fruit. It said a registration statement would be filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission and, when it is effective, proxy statement prospect uses would be made available to shareholders of each company before any vote on the merger.

Kellogg, of Battle Creek, Mich., reported 1975 revenues of $1.2 billion and a net income of $103 million. Tropicana, reported 1975 sales of $162.5 million and a net income of $12.7 million. Mr. Rossi said that he and the Aurora Foundation, a charitable trust, own about 20 percent of the outstanding Tropicana shares.

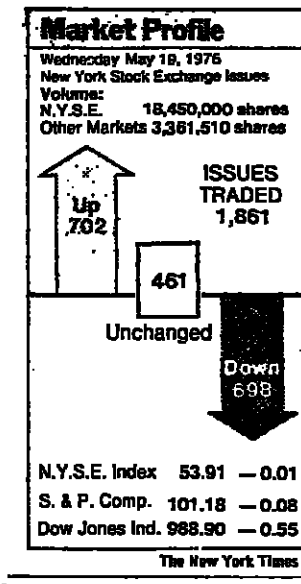

Business Gains Seen
The National Association of Purchasing Management predicts that business recovery will show a quarter-by-quarter improvement for the balance of 1976 and well into 1977. Page 63.

Prices of Bonds Down After Early Rise; A.T.&T. Offering Blunts Stock Market

Aloof Fed a Factor
By JOHN H. ALLAN
Bond prices rebounded moderately yesterday morning and then lost their gains, leaving the credit markets with the feeling that interest rates may be headed still higher despite the fast sales of new issues this week. The early advance was prompted by the swift sale of $400 million of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company notes and debentures and also by the Federal Reserve's adding some money temporarily to the banking system. The slide came later after the Fed did not announce a second rate.

Canada Begins New Search to Buy a Patrol Plane; Lockheed, in Urgent Talks, Trying to Salvage Deal

By RICHARD WITKIN
Canada announced yesterday an immediate new search for a modern long-range patrol plane after Tuesday's collapse of plans to buy 18 such craft from the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation for $750 million. Defense Minister James Richardson, a leading supporter of the Lockheed deal, told the House of Commons in Ottawa that the failure of the Lockheed deal in no way affected Canada's commitment to the Western alliance to perform anti-submarine and other missions. The patrols will continue to be flown with Argus piston planes until a modern replacement can be acquired.

A Navy P-3 Orion off the coast of Hawaii. Plans to sell 18 similar craft to the Canadian Government have fallen through, stunning Lockheed officials. Lockheed, the aircraft's maker, is still trying to seek a way to revive the sale.

Lockheed officials, stunned by the loss of the Canadian order, held urgent discussions with the Canadians yesterday to see if there was some way to revive the deal through an altered formula.

the California-based company would have to dismantle a development team of some 300 employees and put a stop on advance work by many subcontractors if it was not to run up heavy expenses for which it would not be paid. Canada owes Lockheed about $16 million for development work performed up to now. The collapse of the project came Tuesday night after the Canadian Cabinet decided, at a special meeting, that the Government would not provide the $375 million needed to finance the patrol-plane production for the first three years of what was to be a five-year program. Lockheed's senior vice president, William R. Wilson, who was in Ottawa for what he thought would be successful

U.S. Recovery Is Termed Boon For Western Industrial Nations

By CLYDE H. FARNSWORTH
PARIS, May 19—Powered by the United States, the Western industrial nations are headed into a new period of economic expansion at a rate faster than had been predicted a few months ago, key officials from these countries agreed today. A meeting of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development concluded that the recovery in the United States has been so strong it will lead to a massive swing in the current account of the American balance of payments.

can deficit means wider markets for the industrial products and raw materials of other countries, thereby stimulating their own output and employment. Dr. Emminger, as chairman of the O.E.C.D.'s Working Party Three, the forum at which industrial countries get together to discuss economic and monetary prospects, was reporting on key conclusions of the two-day gathering. Edwin Yeo, United States Treasury Under Secretary for International Monetary Affairs, reported that American employment and output of goods and services were now higher than at the 1974 peak, that American businessmen were showing greater confidence by increasing investment outlays and accumulating inventories.

PRICE PRESSURES EXPECTED IN OPEC

SPRING CUTS AVOIDED

Data Suggest Organization Will Stay United Despite Individual Actions

By ERIC PACE
Special to The New York Times
TEHERAN, Iran, May 19—Buoyed by economic recovery in industrial nations, the members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries have largely avoided further oil price cuts this spring, oilmen here report, and are confident that their overall oil production will continue to rise.

These oilmen also expect strong pressure for some increases in oil's base price to be exerted when OPEC representatives gather later this month in Indonesia. The data flowing into this major oil industry center in recent weeks suggest that OPEC is likely to remain strong and unified in the foreseeable future, according to oil-industry sources, despite the unsettled issue of price shaving by individual OPEC members.

Prices Stable Since February
"There is much confidence that the OPEC countries still control the crude oil market and will continue to do so for some time to come," a prominent member of the Tehran business community observed this week. His view, frequently heard here, is somewhat more optimistic about OPEC's prospects than some opinions voiced recently in Western oil centers such as New York.

There have been no widely publicized changes in individual OPEC members' crude-oil prices since February, when Iran unilaterally shaved 9.5 cents from the price of its heavy crude oil, bringing it down to $11.40 a barrel. This compares with the base price of $11.51 for a well-known grade of crude oil called Saudi Arabian light that was set by OPEC last September, raising the previous price 10 percent.

New Attention for Government Issues

By ROBERT METZ

Generally rising interest rates promise to turn new attention to the securities of the Federal Government and its agencies as individuals continue to seek safe investment havens.

In the last month or so, yields on Government one-year notes due May 1977 have risen from about 6 per cent to 6.35 per cent. Yields on two-year notes are up from 6.50 per cent to 7 per cent.

Governments maturing in May 1982 yield 7.7 per cent at today's prices, and the debt securities of Government agencies yield a bit more than that. For example, Federal Land Bank 1982s yield about 7.75 per cent at current prices.

This is of interest to individuals now that both the American Stock Exchange and the PBW Exchange trade the securities.

Until 1975, the market for Government securities was almost entirely institutional. Banks and brokers seldom welcomed investors seeking less than $100,000 worth of Government securities.

But the two exchanges and the Depository Trust Company in New York City have changed all that. The exchanges offer daily markets in each Government issue. Since the securities are listed, the investor is assured of periodic newspaper quotations.

The Depository Trust Company was set up by member firms to make it possible for an individual to buy and sell Governments without taking possession of the easily stolen "bearer" instruments. The Trust Company keeps track of individual accounts for brokers and makes sure individuals get their periodic interest payments.

Since no physical transfer is necessary, the cost of buying and selling is a lot cheaper than it would be otherwise. It costs about 78 cents to process a D. T. C. transaction, compared with an estimated $30 in bank processing charges.

One major brokerage house is known to make a flat charge of $25 to individuals for each trade in Governments—whether 10 bonds or 50 bonds are involved. Another firm charges $5 a bond on orders of up to 10 bonds, but has a minimum charge of $30. Under Securities and Exchange Commission rules in effect for over a year, commissions are subject to negotiation. An individual investor would do well to shop for the best price.

Government notes, bonds and other securities are directly guaranteed by the Federal Government. Bonds of its agencies, though not directly guaranteed, are regarded to be of almost equal safety.

Individuals should recognize that the securities do carry some risk. For example, each time that the general interest level changes the market price of outstanding issues rises or falls to reflect the change. Thus if yields were to rise above current levels, the market prices of outstanding issues could be expected to ease and thus reflect the new higher yields.

The primary considerations in choosing Government and agency bonds are yield and maturity, with the highest yields generally to be found in bonds of the longest maturities.

Many investors choose bonds that serve specific investment objectives. Some buy bonds that mature at their retirement and periodically thereafter.

Others buy Governments calculated to mature when a child is ready for college. Under certain types of trusts, the bond interest is taxed at the child's low tax rate. Such trusts can be set up in such a way that the bond will revert to the parent at maturity. Thus the parent can control the proceeds, using them to pay college expenses.

There are still billions of dollars worth of so-called "flower bonds" outstanding that can be cashed in at face value prior to maturity upon the death of the owner and used to pay estate taxes.

One broker said that his firm "time stamps" flower bonds all the time. His is called a trade completed at 3:30 P.M. in behalf of a person who died at 5:15 P.M. the same day. Most of these bonds, which generally carry low coupons, sell today at about $80-$850 per $1,000 bond.

The estate must pay capital gains taxes on the difference between face amount and purchase price, but there is still a considerable saving on the state tax.

Another set of figures produced at the O.E.C.D. meeting also pointed to the United States as the main dynamo in the new growth.

This showed that for the 24 O.E.C.D. member countries from Western Europe, North Africa and developed Asia, the total current account deficit this year would be around $19 billion, compared with a $6 billion deficit last year.

Practically all of the swing was accounted for by the United States, a fact that means that the other countries more or less will be in balance.

Canadian Stake of 25% Will Be Set for Oil Fields
OTTAWA, May 19 (Reuters)—Canada plans to require a minimum 25 per cent Canadian participation as a condition for allowing new oil and natural gas fields to go into production.

Energy Minister Alastair Gillespie told the House of Commons today that the Government plans to impose these ownership limits in legislation next fall to govern oil and gas exploration in Federal lands both offshore and in the Arctic.

CANADA IN MARKET FOR A PLANE AGAIN

completion of the deal, was given a little more than three hours to commit his company to provide the financing on its own.

"I said it was utterly impossible," Mr. Wilson declared in a late-evening interview Tuesday. He said that he had offered to extend the formal deadline for concluding the contract for another few days at no cost to the Canadians to provide time to explore alternate financing plans.

But Supply Minister Jean Pierre Goyet, who had conveyed the news that the Government would not do the financing, turned down the offer of a few days' leeway.

The turn of events was a severe setback for Lockheed, which has been buffeted in recent years not only by financial problems but also by its involvement in the scandal over payoffs by American corporations to obtain business overseas.

There was no suggestion in the financial community, however, that the Canadian reversal would pose any new threat to Lockheed's survival. The company has made a promising comeback in the last year or so, despite the drying up of orders for its L-1011 jumbo jet, the project that had brought it to the edge of disaster.

The production line for the long-range patrol aircraft has been kept open for the Canadian market, which files the original version, known as the P-3 Orion, will eventually have a fleet of several hundred. The plane, packed with sophisticated electronic equipment, also is operated by Australia, New Zealand, Iran, Norway and Spain.

Lockheed's other principal products, on which it makes a sizeable profit, include subsonic missiles, space vehicles and a carrier-based anti-sub plane.

The $375 million of interim financing for the Canadian planes originally was to have been provided by a consortium of Canada's 10 chartered banks, but their unexpected week-end decision that the terms were not acceptable that started the swift sequence of events that led to outright cancellation of the Canadian order Tuesday night. It was widely believed that the banks feared they did not have sufficient assurance they would, in all events, be repaid for advances made to Lockheed as work on the planes was completed.

Shipyard Contract Compliance Urged

the Clements proposal to reopen the contracts, they would make a profit of at least $74 million.

Rather than reopen the contracts, Admiral Rickover advocated that the claims be settled "on their legal merits" through the established claims settlement procedures of the Nav. "Why bother negotiating and signing contracts if they are not going to be enforced?" he asked.

Throughout the letter ran a charge by the admiral, who has long been at odds with the shipyards, that the claims were exaggerated and were largely to cover cost increases for which the shipyards, not the Navy, were responsible.

As an example of the "pressure" that he said the shipbuilders sought to apply to the Pentagon, Admiral Rickover said that "a well known Washington lawyer under retainer to Tennessee last year lobbied extensively in Congress and in the executive branch in an effort to dissuade the Secretary of the Navy from extending use on active duty when my reappointment came up for renewal last January."

mit large, after-the-fact claims in an effort to get the Government to pay for the overrun plus a desired profit," he said. "Frequently these claims are exaggerated."

The shipyards, he said, "exaggerate the effects of Government actions. They refuse to support the elements with cause and effect analysis. They revise claims repeatedly. They threaten to stop work if the claims are not paid quickly. They complain publicly and to defense officials about unfair treatment."

"By these means, some shipbuilders believe they will be paid more than if their claims were settled on legal merits," said.

As an example of the "pressure" that he said the shipbuilders sought to apply to the Pentagon, Admiral Rickover said that "a well known Washington lawyer under retainer to Tennessee last year lobbied extensively in Congress and in the executive branch in an effort to dissuade the Secretary of the Navy from extending use on active duty when my reappointment came up for renewal last January."

It was widely believed that the banks feared they did not have sufficient assurance they would, in all events, be repaid for advances made to Lockheed as work on the planes was completed.

Thomas G. Corcoran, a prominent lawyer-lobbyist who for more than a decade has represented Tenneco, said in an interview that he had been approached by Navy officials about "how could they get Rickover out of the hair of the shipbuilders" and he had replied: "why don't you make him Commandant of the Naval Academy?"

Mr. Corcoran, whose Washington connections go back to New Deal days, insisted that he had not lobbied in Congress against another two-year tour of active duty for the 76-year-old admiral, who, he said, "regards me as a personal enemy because I have been standing in the way of his effort to nationalize the shipyards."

Mr. Corcoran was notably present at a hearing yesterday of the House Armed Services Committee, shaking the hands of Navy admirals who were publicly supporting the Clements plan.

Within some Congressional circles, the Clements proposal is viewed as an attempt by the Defense Department and the shipbuilders to cut down the independent, demanding authority that Admiral Rickover has exercised over the shipbuilders. If so, it could present a personal test of political power, since Admiral Rickover has considerable influence among senior members of the House Armed Services Committee.

Admiral Rickover suggested that "if the Navy is going to have to guarantee profit on shipbuilding contracts under threat of not being able to get Navy ships," then the Federal Government should acquire title to the shipyards and have them operated by private industry under long-term contracts.

PANAMA OFFERING TRADE BANK SITE

holds 40 percent of the capital of the development bank, has been opposed to employing funds from the bank's ordinary capital, as well as borrowing in the United States, to finance competitive Latin American exports.

Mr. Barletta's proposal cut through the debate within the bank, which has limited any significant export financing by the bank, and transferred the solution to the government and private financial institutions in Latin America.

One of several proposals under study would create a multinational banking institution in Panama specializing in export financing. Initial capital would be subscribed by the central banks of Latin American countries, domestic private banks and foreign subsidiaries of major international banks registered in Panama.

The new bank would receive deposits from the central banks and other partners, probably in a range of $30 million, as well as from any other source with access to the Panamanian financial market, which could discount bankers' acceptances of 180 to 300 days to finance Latin American exports. Mr. Barletta said up to $300 million could be mobilized.

The Panamanian proposal was widely supported by the Latin American finance ministers, who called on the board of directors of the development bank to approve the financing of the study.

Results for the quarter were encouraging. However, in comparing these with the results of 1975, it must be remembered that the results in that quarter were particularly weak as customers were running down their stocks severely and profits from edible fats affected by raw material price movements. A 15 percent increase in sales in the quarter was due to higher sales volume. This increase was due to re-building of stocks by customers. There was a general improvement in profit margins, but in Europe they are still too low. Profits from edible fats maintained the recovery which began in the third quarter of 1975. The problems of our meat business persist. Our results from animal feeds improved conditions for the industry. Results from chemicals, paper, plastic began to recover. Detergents, sundry foods and toilet preparations start to the year. The United States and Canada improved. In other countries outside Europe profits advanced strongly. UAG International continued their excellent growth. Profitable to ordinary capital rose more than operating profit. The average rate in profit was well below the exceptionally high level of the 1975 first quarter, but earned reflected our success in improving liquidity. The increase in outside due to improved profitability of partly owned subsidiaries.

before, while S. S. Kresge Company's profits jumped 120 percent.

Marcor Inc., which operates both Montgomery Ward, a large retail chain, and the Container Corporation of America, had a 60 percent rise in net profit in the first quarter and 8.1 percent higher sales, the Chicago-based concern reported yesterday.

In the quarter, Federated's profit was $24.9 million, or 56 cents a share, compared with $24.2 million, or 55 cents a share, in the year-earlier quarter. Sales rose to $359 million from $768.1 million.

Federated's profit difficulties in the quarter arose from a combination of various factors in specific divisions, Ralph Lazarus, the chairman, said. He said that some divisions did not meet their sales plan and a few experienced higher markdowns.

A Los Angeles price war among food chains affected the earnings of Ralph's Supermarkets, Federated's retail food subsidiary, he added. He also said that the company had substantially higher pre-opening costs in the quarter, compared to the year before.

A Federated spokesman yesterday declined to identify which of the concern's department-store divisions had difficulties. Asked if Abraham and Straus were one of them, as trade reports have recently indicated, he similarly declined comment.

"We should have had a better profit performance in light of the size of our sales increase," Mr. Lazarus said in a formal statement. The disappointing profit gain sent Federated's stock on the New York Stock Exchange to a low for the year, closing at 47 1/2, off 2 1/2. The year's high has been 60.

Allied's net earnings in the quarter were $7.08 million, or 85 cents a share, compared with $4.24 million, or 52 cents a share, the year before. Sales totaled $384.1 million against $355 million.

Business was generally good across the country, with Allied's Bon Marche division in Seattle and the Stern Brothers stores in New Jersey registering "very strongly," said Howard E. Hassler, Allied's senior vice president. The only weak store division was Gertz Long Island, which operates stores in Queens, New York, and Long Island.

The Allied profit improvement came primarily from increased gross margins in the merchandising operation and benefited to some extent from lower interest costs. The Al-for the rest of 1976 "is most encouraging" and added: "We shall enjoy a profit in 1976. We shall be short of the return on investment to which we are entitled but it may well be in the black. It is my intention to see that we remain there."

"Despite Mr. Casey's optimistic report, he was confronted with a barrage of criticism from several stockholders that at times erupted into shouting matches.

Albert Luetzow of Shawnee, who said his family owns 197,700 shares, charged that American actually lost over $50 million last year before accounting changes for pension costs and depreciation. Mr. Casey said he agreed with this figure.

Asserting he suffered a paper loss of $2 million on his stock last year, Mr. Luetzow nominated himself as a protest member of the board of directors. He was overwhelmingly defeated.

Mr. Luetzow also objected to the re-election of Arthur Young and Company as auditors, charging that they had been negligent in the past in disclosing political payments and costs of other operations.

Another stockholder suggested American should frequently invite bids for the company's accounting business.

Mr. Casey said he personally would favor changing the accounting firm's partners on the account every five or six years to get a fresh team.

In his prepared remarks, Mr. Casey said that the company opposes a bill in Congress for deregulating the airline industry and said the premise that competition would result in lower fares and higher profits "is utter nonsense."

Expert judgment in municipal bonds...

When we don't like a municipal bond we don't let profit change our mind. Time and time again, we have passed up the opportunity to make good profits because we wouldn't sell a bond we didn't like.

J.W.T. Challenges TV Violence

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

The latest indication of a growing rebellion in the advertising industry against television violence is "The Desensitization of America," an hour-long, provocative, no-holds-barred presentation created by the J. Walter Thompson Company, the country's largest worldwide agency.

And, while changes in TV programming might seem to be its immediate goal, the presentation covers the violence and sexual revolution in all media.

It includes slides, film footage, audio track and a live presenter, and has been shown some 50 times already around the country to various advertiser and campus groups.

Yesterday at the agency, Arnold E. Grisman, an executive vice president and the presentation's creator, put it on for some people from Newsweek and The Christian Science Monitor.

He talked about "almost total exposure to media" with each medium making "more and more intense efforts to grab our attention" and the level of resistance rising to meet it.

"What shocked us yesterday does not shock us today," Mr. Grisman said. "What interested us yesterday does not interest us today. This is the process we have described as the desensitization of America. It is a threat and a challenge to every one of us."

He started off with the introduction of rock music in 1954 and took it from "Sh-Boom" through Alice Cooper, "perhaps the most curious and ugliest phenomenon of the seventies."

Then Mr. Grisman got into television where he said that at night "violence dominates our time—but at the same time we keep escalating the violence scale."

As for film, he said, "it has to try to do something that television can't or won't. And as television gets more and more uninhibited, that gets harder and harder."

Clips of such films as "Death Wish," "The French Connection" and "The Exorcist" were shown along with some of the disaster epics.

And with appropriate visual materials Mr. Grisman covered the skin-book scene, pornographic movies ("Is it possible that, at the rate we are going, we will succeed in making even sex boring?"), stand-up comics who are the spiritual descendants of Lenny Bruce and the National Lampoon ("This is the comedy of chaos. It is the comedy of mounting cynicism—and cynicism is one of the dominant trends in America today.")

He hit also on the national spread of the discotheque where "a lot of attitudes have come out of the closet on to the disco dance floor" and the midnight movie, "films designed as trash for young people who aren't about to go to bed and still have nothing to do."

"The media," concluded Mr. Grisman, "have a responsibility in this to themselves as well as to the public. We seem to be heading for a state of sensory overload."

The advertising industry conducts its business in the media, he noted, adding, "We ourselves have to reconsider the impact those media have on our messages and on the public to whom they are addressed."

He predicted that the time is not far off when advertisers in violent programming will be subject not only to consumer letter-writing campaigns but also to product boycotts.

After the presentation, Mr. Grisman said that the agency is recommending that its clients not advertise in such shows and that such clients as Kraft and Kodak already felt that way.

Asked if he thought critics would say this is an attempt by advertisers to control programming, he responded, "What an advertiser is doing is deciding where he wants to put his advertising."

The Thompson presentation came into being as a result of an invitation to speak tendered Mr. Grisman by a group of newspaper publishers. And in a second part to it the executive revealed that the agency is looking for funding to establish a Print Institute.

Because of data available on declining reading scores among schoolchildren and similar drops in Army IQ tests and college entrance exams, the agency is convinced the nation is on the verge of illiteracy.

The Institute would coordinate activities directed at improving the teaching of reading and also "provide all print media with ideas and direct assistance in areas of design, typography, illustration, copy."

The presentation will get its first major showing during the annual convention of the American Advertising Federation in Washington June 5-9.

Kawasaki to Thompson

The J. Walter Thompson Company, Los Angeles, has been named agency for the motorcycle and accessory division of the Kawasaki Motors Corporation. The billings are over $4 million.

Last week Kawasaki said that Ogilvy & Mather, Los Angeles, would handle its jet ski and snowmobile advertising. Both pieces of the business were at Cunningham & Walsh for five years.

F.C.B. Outlook Is Hopeful

At the annual meeting yesterday of Foote, Cone & Belding Communications, Arthur W. Schultz, chairman, having given a history of the agency got down to the nitty gritty—1976. "I can tell you that we are slightly ahead of budget so far this year and that, based on operational budgets only, we hope to achieve an increase of 10 to 15 percent over 1975 earnings." That, of course, will depend on overseas currency translation, he noted.

Pepsi-Cola Challenge

Pepsi-Cola, which began its tastebud-to-tastebud confrontation with Coca-Cola in Texas last year, yesterday announced in Detroit that Michigan is next for the "Pepsi Challenge."

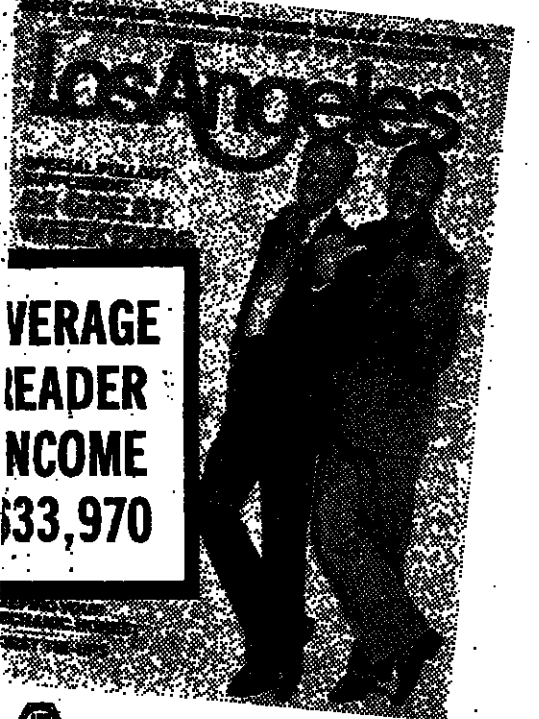

The second-ranking cola (Pepsi) has a campaign by Barton, Durstine & Osborn that has consumers taking a taste test of the two brands and the majority allegedly liking Pepsi. According to an agency spokesman, the tests were conducted by an independent research company.

You suppose they talked to Charlie the Tuna?

Creamer/FSR has just picked up the San Giorgio Macaroni Inc., a division of Hershey Foods, with billings over $1 million. The previous agency was W. B. Doner, Baltimore.

Continuing Recovery in Business Forecast for 1976 and Into 1977

Business recovery will show a quarter-by-quarter improvement for the balance of 1976 and well into 1977, the National Association of Purchasing Management Inc. predicted yesterday.

The association's semiannual survey of its members indicated that 55 percent of the purchasing executives thought that the third quarter would do better than the results anticipated for the second quarter, and only 7 percent thought it would be worse.

Looking ahead to next year, 37 percent said the first quarter of 1977 would be better than the expected good fourth quarter and only 5 percent expected it to be worse.

Output and Supply Of Gasoline Down In U.S. Last Week

Both production and stocks of gasoline in the United States fell last week, according to statistics announced yesterday by the American Petroleum Institute.

The drop in both supplies and output came as a surprise, since most analysts had expected at least an increase in production as the nation neared its maximum driving period during the summer vacation months.

May is the maximum maintenance shutdown period for refineries in the United States and some analysts have suggested that the upturn in refinery use and the drop in production can be explained by the fact that the refineries that have come back on stream are those that are not geared for maximum gasoline production.

Bache Group Reports Profit Advanced 65% in Quarter

Bache Group Inc., parent of Bache Halsey Stuart, the brokerage house, showed a 65 percent rise in profits for the quarter ended April 30, John E. Leslie, chairman, reported yesterday.

Profits for the quarter, Bache's third fiscal period, rose to $5.3 million, or 75 cents a share, he said, from the year-earlier $3.2 million, or 45 cents a share, while revenues advanced to $71.6 million from $57.3 million.

Capital of the company, he said, stood at $127.3 million, only $14 million of it in subordinated debt.

of two-year notes at an average yield of 7.16 percent or about 1/8-point higher than two-year notes available in the secondary market at the close of trading Tuesday.

The Treasury reported that it received $4.7 billion in orders for the notes that resulted in yields ranging from 7.08 percent to 7.19 percent. It accepted 56 percent of the orders made at the high yield, and it awarded $369 million at the average yield on a noncompetitive basis.

In contrast to yesterday's 7.16 percent average yield, two-year notes were sold on May 4 at 6.61 percent. Despite its being Wednesday, the final day of the banking week for the purpose of calculating reserves and hence a day when it is difficult to correlate Federal Reserve market action with monetary policy, the credit markets took their cues largely from the Fed.

The interest rate on interbank loans of the funds they have on deposit at Federal Reserve banks reached 5 7/16 percent and then the Fed purchased Treasury securities for one day and that lowered the rate slightly. Later, however, the funds rate edged back up and the central bank made no additional purchases, agreed to its aloofness miffed the bond market, and prices slid back.

Despite the aborted rebound, the credit markets handled a substantial volume of new issues, especially corporate bonds. Some of the sales added doubts, for investors did not move quickly to buy them.

The Wisconsin Power & Light Company, for example, sold $55 million of 30-year bonds, rated Aa by Moody's and Aa by Standard & Poor's, that were offered to investors at a yield of 8.85 percent.

Late in the afternoon, the issue was about to be sold, but a collapse in the bond market, led by the First Boston Corporation, estimated.

The 8.85 percent for Wisconsin Power, generally regarded as among the more attractive Aa/AA utilities, was perhaps a little lower than it would have been late last week when many similarly rated issues were trading in the secondary corporate bond market at yields of 8.90 or 8.95 percent.

The interest rate on the issue was set at 8 7/8 percent, and the price was 100 2/3 percent of face value to produce its 8.85 percent yield to maturity in 2006.

The $400 million Du Pont financing consisted of $300 million of 8 1/2 percent 30-year debentures and $100 million of 8 percent 10-year notes, both to yield from 6 percent in 1986 up to 7 1/2 percent in 2010. In the international sphere, Australia and Morgan Stanley set terms on $200 million of bonds, rated Aaa and Aaa, to be offered today.

The total will consist of $75 million of five-year bonds offered at 8 1/4 to 10 to yield 8.25 percent; $50 million of 10-year bonds offered at 8 1/4 to 9 1/4 to yield 8.80 percent; and $75 million of 20-year 9 1/4 to 10 to yield 9.25 percent.

There were these other fixed-income financing developments yesterday: Columbia Gas System sold $75 million of general debentures, rated Aaa, at 8 1/4 to 9 1/4 to yield 8.25 percent; and the General Telephone and Electric Co. sold $100 million of 10-year bonds, rated Aaa, at 8 1/4 to 9 1/4 to yield 8.25 percent.

Mr. Levitt also outlined New York State's borrowing plans for the fiscal year 1976 and March 31, 1977. The state, he said, will spend $736 million for capital construction to be financed by selling $138 million of bonds and $598 million of bond anticipation notes at competitive bids.

In the first sale—at least $45 million of bonds—is scheduled for July, Mr. Levitt said. In another New York area financing, the State Power Authority sold $80 million of revenue bonds through a group headed by Dillon Read & Company. The bonds were priced at 100. Both were all sold, Morgan Stanley & Company, the managing underwriter reported.

In the tax-exempt bond market, Arthur Levitt, New York State Comptroller, disclosed plans to sell $300 million of tax and revenue anticipation notes late in June. The sale would be a secondary offering by the state's Common Retirement Fund of notes purchased to complete its "spring borrowing."

es in Nursing Homes ld Recur, Panel Finds

By LINDA GREENHOUSE
Special to The New York Times

May 19 — The lack of any useful guidelines for determining which elderly person needs which level of care.

Some 21,000 elderly people, including many discharged mental patients, now live in these adult homes. The homes are under the supervision of the State Board of Social Welfare which, according to the commission report, has regulatory powers that are so "extraordinarily vague" that they make enforcement impossible. The commission recommended that the board be given the power to levy fines of up to $1,000 for each violation of its regulations.

The volume of the proper placement of the elderly was entitled "Anything Goes," an apt two-word summary of the commission's findings. With nursing homes setting their own admission policies, the commission said, many are able to avoid accepting acutely ill patients who are the most difficult and costly to care for. In addition, the so-called voluntary, or nonprofit homes, frequently solicit or demand contributions from the patient's family as conditions for admission, even though the home receives Medicaid reimbursement for the patient's care.

Precise Standards

The commission recommended that the relevant state agencies develop precise standards for placement in different types of facilities; with a quota system to force each nursing home to accept a proportionate number of patients who need such care. The commission also recommended that the Health Department approve all admission policies and prohibit the soliciting of contributions.

Another section of the summary release today expanded on an earlier recommendation that New York State find a new way to measure the quality of care offered by nursing homes. The measures now used rely almost entirely on what the commission called "complete paperwork" designed to prove that the nursing home has the structural and staffing capacity to provide adequate care. But there is no system of measuring whether that care actually reaches the patients, a complicated subject on which the commission urged further study.

Mr. Abram, the commission's chairman, told the Governor today that he was "retaining" $100,000 of the group's original $900,000 appropriation, because not all the money had

Moreland Panel's Record

Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, May 19 — The Moreland Act Commission's effort to give New York State stronger tools with which to regulate the nursing home industry has been well-received in Albany. Ten bills of an 11-bill package the commission sponsored last year became law.

The only bill that failed was one that would have prohibited legislators who are lawyers from representing clients before state agencies. This bill passed the Assembly, but it died in the Senate, which is expected to be no more receptive this year.

Following is a legislative scorecard on the Moreland Commission — the bills that have become law and those that are now before the Legislature.

Private Lawsuits

The first of the commission's bills to win approval last year provides for private lawsuits, either on an individual or class action basis, by nursing home patients against nursing homes in which they have suffered abuse or inadequate care. Since most patients have no resources with which to finance a lawsuit, the new law calls for compensatory damages to be assessed against a nursing home and allows the court to order the nursing home to pay the lawyer's fees.

Another of the new laws allows the state to sue for triple damages in cases in which a nursing home operator has fraudulently overstated his costs to get a larger Medicaid reimbursement.

To give the Health Department more control over these financial statements, another new law requires that all financial statements submitted to the Health Department by a nursing home be audited by an independent certified accountant.

Expanded Power

The Health Department was also given the power to assess fines of up to $1,000 a day for violations of regulations governing patient care, and received expanded power to suspend the operating certificates of nursing homes that endanger the health or safety of patients.

In licensing new nursing homes, the Public Health Council is required by another law to determine first that other facilities operated by the same persons meet proper standards.

Other legislation in the 1975 package requires the Health Department to make two inspections a year of each facility, with at least one inspection to be unannounced. One measure requires nursing homes to maintain copies of Health Department surveys, available for public inspections and another requires full disclosure of the identity of persons with a financial interest in the nursing home.

Last Thursday, Governor Carey, on behalf of the Moreland Commission, resubmitted a bill prohibiting legislators from practicing law before state agencies and introduced a new bill that would set up an advocate unit for patients within the State Office of the Aging. This new unit would have the power to investigate complaints and initiate its own investigations.

proved to be necessary. At one the commission interviewed.

The four other members of the commission were Peter A. Berle, Dr. Theodore Rossman, Dorothy B. Wadsworth, and Amanda Wilkins.

At a news conference that followed the Moreland Commission briefing, Governor Carey struck a conciliatory tone toward the Legislature. But he responded sharply to the Republican leadership's proposal for a $300 million tax cut this fall, contingent on a high level of revenue growth.

"They're seeing the pot of gold and we haven't even seen the rainbow yet," the Governor said.

Reform Through TV Televised Hearings on Aged Helped Moreland Commission Achieve Goals

By JOHN L. HESS

The Moreland Act Commission on Nursing Homes, which formally disbanded yesterday, will long be remembered for a series of televised hearings in the spring and early summer of 1975. On their home screens, citizens saw dramatic analysis testimony by witnesses citing bad treatment, massive fraud and a rejection of responsibility by New York City and state officials. Experts in the field agree that these hearings, keeping warm the climate for corrective action, were the chief and considerable contribution of the commission in its brief lifetime.

Governor Carey established the commission in January last year, to carry on the work of exposure begun by the Temporary Commission on Living Costs and the economy, headed by Assemblyman Andrew Stein, Democrat of Manhattan, and to draft reforms. For the chairman of the new commission, Morris B. Abram, the latter was his major task, because, he said, the alarm had been well-sounded. Ironically, others involved in the effort agree that his major contribution was to keep up the level of public concern.

Already, the work of reform was under way in the State Health Department, under the leadership of the new Commissioner, Dr. Robert F. Whalen, in the Legislature, under the leadership of Assemblymen Stein and Alan G. Hevesi, Democrat of Queens, and in the Public Health Council.

Package of Legislation

A package of legislation was introduced, to which the commission made two major contributions: a bill to permit class-action damage suits in behalf of patients, which was approved, and a bill to bar legislators from representing clients before state agencies, which was passed by the Assembly but died in the Senate.

The class action bill, on which Mr. Abram laid great store, has yet to be tested by a suit. The legislative ethics bill has been reintroduced, but is given little hope for passage. In this, such reformers as Assemblyman Stein see an abundance of political pressures. He reproaches the Moreland Commission for having halted its work of exposure too soon.

The commission itself said in its summary:

"Despite the neglect of the elderly, there has been a constituency in the nursing home area to which politicians have carefully attended. This constituency, the owners and sponsors of facilities, has known what it wants with great clarity, has sought favor upon favor, and on many occasions has actually hired politicians to pursue its interests."

This, it said, will continue to be the case "unless public attention and anger are continually focused and unless politicians are held to the highest standards of conduct."

The commission has assumed from the beginning that the present pluralistic structure of Medicaid would continue, with more than two-thirds of the services provided by the profit-making sector. Spokesmen for that sector declined immediate comment on its findings, but Mitchell Waite, a leader of the nonprofit sector, offered a mixed judgment.

Generally, he said, the commission did "a tremendous job." But he charged the commission with having leaned harder on the nonprofit institutions than on the proprietary ones.

Mr. Waite said that cost limitations pushed by the Moreland Commission would force voluntary homes to reduce health services and, in the end, cost Medicaid more money in hospitalizing and emergency care.

The task of regulation now rests with a strengthened State Health Department—which is overwhelmed with litigation. The task of continuing exposure now falls upon the press, which has always had the responsibility and has only sporadically exercised it, and upon the office of the special prosecutor for nursing homes, Charles J. Hynes.

Authority for Hearings

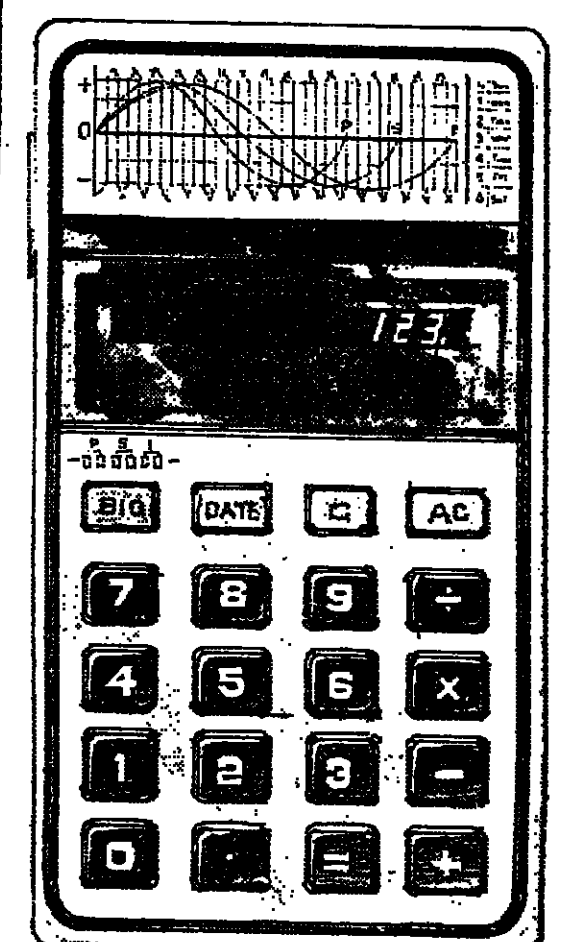

Mr. Hynes observed in a recent interview that his office has the authority to hold public hearings, but that this could conflict with his primary function of prosecuting felonies. Many abuses are not criminal or cannot be prosecuted. For the time being, no agency is dedicated full time to their exposure.

Given the enormous interests involved—Medicaid will spend nearly $3 billion this year in New York State—Mr. Abram predicted yesterday that another such investigation would be needed in five to 10 years. Unless others, such as the judicial system, the regulators and the media, keep up their concern with the problem, it is conceivable that the need may arise sooner.

Personal Finance: Insuring Incomes for Disabled

LARD SLOANE

With 76 million people holding disability insurance, for protection against loss of income cannot work because of illness or injury, there are two basic kinds of return-of-premium forms or riders. The first offers to return 80 percent of the premiums paid at the end of a 10-year period.

As with all return-of-premium plans, this approach assumes that the insured has not received a claim payment during that period. Any claims paid are subtracted from the amount to be returned to the policyholder. And if claims exceed a stated percentage of the premium, there is no refund of premium.

The other approach is generally referred to as the cash surrender value provision. In these policies, the insured, at age 65, receives the total amount of premiums paid less the claims.

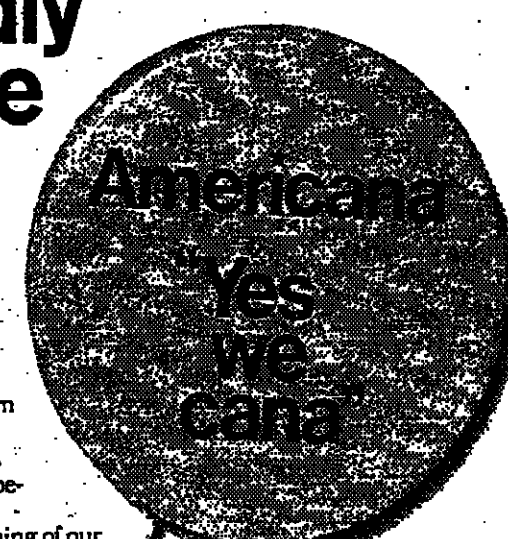

If the insured wants to terminate his insurance before he reaches 65, he receives, say, 5 percent of the premiums paid as long as the policy had been held for three years, with larger returns guaranteed if the insurance was in force longer. Some insurers require the surrender of the policy to obtain this cash value.

With return-of-premium insurance, the holder of a disability policy might tend to submit fewer claims, since every penny paid out comes from his own pocket. However, many insurers who write these policies say that they have no statistics to bear out this assumption.

Buyers of this insurance have an incentive to maintain their policies in force until the end of the 10-year period or until age 65 to get return of premiums. And insurance companies recognize that the buyer of such a policy is probably a long-term customer.

As is the case with any form of insurance, return-of-premium policies are advisable for certain individuals but not for others. Insurance agents or brokers can provide useful information, as can financial consultants and others familiar with this field. But the final decision should be made based on personal needs and goals—and ability to save money without any enforced savings program.
